B.C. welfare rates increased 8.6%

By JAKE BANKY

The new Guaranteed Annual Income for Need (GAIN) rates and allowances were revealed by Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy.

Starting May 1, basic income assistance rates will rise an average of 8.6 per cent.

McCarthy said this figure exceeds the Vancouver Consumer Index increase of 7.6 per cent over the past 12 months.

And the minister promised her staff will be thoroughly examining the possibility of an annual cost-of-living adjustment to the GAIN allowance, so receipients can keep up with inflation.

Under the new rates, a single welfare recipient under the age of 31 will be eligible for a maximum support of $266 a month, compared to $240 under the old rates.

For those between 60 and 64, the maximum rises to $321 from $305.

For a single parent with one child, the top limit will be $533, up from $490.

The rate change will cost the government $24 million in the current fiscal year.

Two other allowances will also be adjusted upwards May 1.

The comforts allowance — a payment for personal needs and sundries for those clients who reside in long-term care facilities, hospitals and adult residences — will increase to $50 a month from $40.

The extra allowance for blind recipients of GAIN handicapped benefits who use registered guide dogs will increase to $35 a month from $25.

Changes in Family Support Program subsidies were also announced.

The maximum subsidy payable by the ministry will be increased by eight per cent for each of the various day care programs.

In addition, two new categories of day care subsidies have been established to provide higher rates for children under the age of three.

Some of the ministry's family support services require an income test to determine the financial contribution from a family or individuals receiving the services.

The additional exemption for the disabled or for seniors over 65 in a family has been increased to $90 a month from $64.

CRD poised for Tillicum legal fight

By PAT DUFOUR

The battle between the Capital Regional District and Saanich over a proposed extension to the Tillicum shopping centre is coming to a head.

Regional board chairman Jim Campbell said today the CRD is poised to take legal action the minute Saanich approves removal of a restrictive covenant which would allow only 295,000 square feet of leasable space in the centre.

He said the district's solicitor would apply for an injunction to freeze the matter until the whole issue can be hammered out in court.

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier has called a special meeting for tonight to deal with the issue.

Couvelier Wednesday told the CRD board "to stick regionalism in its ear" and stormed out of the board meeting.

The outburst came during discussion of a bylaw to close a legal loophole and prevent Saanich from allowing the extension.

The extension would increase the size from 295,000 square feet to 495,000 square feet and add an Eaton's store.

Saanich aldermen John Mika and Howard Sturrock remained to vote for the bylaw.

The bylaw was given three readings and referred to the technical planning and regional planning committees.

Couvelier blew up when Campbell ruled him out of order as the mayor tried to interrupt Mika, who was arguing that the expansion proposal had been sprung on council without warning.

"That's absolutely not true," Couvelier snapped.

Replied Mika: "I don't know about other members of council but it was sprung without warning on me."

Mika said litigation might have been the best way to settle the matter but Couvelier voted against this course.

"It's a bit late for him now," Mika said, adding, "the chickens are coming home to roost."

Couvelier said earlier he was against the extension because of an agreement made between Saanich and the CRD.

Under that agreement, Saanich placed a restrictive covenant on the Tillicum site which prevented Cal Investments from developing more than 295,000 square feet of leasable space.

Last week, however, Saanich council decided the covenant should be lifted to allow Eaton's into the complex.

Layoffs at GM hit 90,300

DETROIT (Reuter) — General Motors Corp. today announced it would cut production at five U.S. plants next week, temporarily idling 12,750 workers.

That will bring the total of indefinite layoffs of GM workers to 90,300 in the U.S.

GM said the cutbacks, needed to balance inventories in a sluggish auto market, will affect production of trucks, chassis and full- and mid-size cars.

GM previously announced cutbacks at three other plants beginning next week, placing 8,300 workers on indefinite layoff.

The five domestic automakers said Wednesday car sales in the April 11-20 period declined 32.2 per cent on a daily sales basis to 147,371 units from 244,379 last year.

The industry's daily selling rate of 18,421 for the period was only slightly higher than the 18,336 recorded in the period in 1975.

Bank rates drop again

OTTAWA (CP) — The Bank of Canada rate fell to 15.67 per cent, down from 15.96 per cent last week, the central bank announced today.

In response, the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Royal Bank of Canada, the Toronto Dominion Bank and the Bank of Montreal announced their prime lending rates will be cut to 16.75 per cent effective Monday.

Cuban wave reaches U.S.

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — The stream of Cuban refugees was developing into a flood today, with 200 more arriving here at daylight and at least another 1,000 reported on their way in a flotilla of hundreds of boats.

The refugees are crossing the Straits of Florida in boats piloted by Cuban exiles and others willing to defy U.S. state department orders.

Boat captains arriving today said they passed hundreds of boats crossing the 145 kilometres between Cuba and the tip of the Florida Keys.

"There's got to be 500 or 600 boats out there. There're lots of little ones," said Tony Ravello, captain of the Surgidero.

"There are still continuous launchings. We know that there are at least 300 en route to Cuba. It's going to get a lot busier," said Key West Coast Guard Cmdr. Samuel Dennis.

Granma, the Cuban Communist party newspaper, said 444 "anti-social elements" left the port of Mariel on Wednesday, and that 94 boats from the U.S. were in Mariel at the end of the day, waiting to load.

The U.S. Coast Guard was warning boatlift operators they face arrest and heavy fines for bringing illegal aliens into the U.S.

The state department in Washington also warned that boat owners are subject to prosecution. The Immigration and Naturalization Service said it will "act to stop boat owners from bringing Cubans and other aliens" into the country.

However, local U.S. Immigration and coast guard officials weren't showing any inclination to stop the boats.

"My boss told me, don't you dare arrest anybody," one unidentified immigration officer was quoted by The Miami News.

Vessels were putting to sea from Key West Marina every five minutes Wednesday as bidding for charter boats reached as high as $10,000. About 495 refugees docked here Wednesday aboard six boats. A boat also slipped into harbor at Miami with 65 refugees aboard.

The refugees were taken by bus from Key West to a community centre in Miami's Little Havana district, where they were processed by immigration agents and greeted by a crowd of exiles, hoping to find relatives.

The boatlift began last weekend with Cuba's consent after the Cuban government suspended refugee flights to Costa Rica.

The state department has warned the boatlift was undermining international efforts to evacuate the thousands of Cubans who sought refuge at the Peruvian Embassy in Havana.

Fearing many boats will run into difficulties during the 12-hour trip, the coast guard had two 12-metre patrol boats, two 28-metre cutters and one 64-metre cutter on standby.

Dockmaster Dean Patterson said: "We've already had two or three that came back. Small boats just aren't made for that kind of endurance."

Beer up 20 cents, gas boosted too

The price of beer has been increased in B.C. by 20 cents a dozen, effective immediately, the liquor distribution branch announced Wednesday.

And Greater Victoria gas prices have gone up by about .4 cents a litre or two cents a gallon as a result of changes in the federal sales tax.

A liquor branch spokesman said beer prices were supposed to rise May 7, but the branch implemented the increases sooner because of new federal taxes. It will apply to new stock as it reaches the shelves.

No puffing plan up in smoke

By NORMAN GIDNEY

An imaginative experiment to make an entire provincial government office building a no smoking zone is collapsing because hard core smokers are refusing to abide by the voluntary guidelines.

The Richard Blanshard building — headquarters of the B.C. health ministry at Blanshard and Pandora — adopted a no smoking policy last year restricting puffers to the coffee rooms and lounges on each floor and one-third of the 1,000 seat cafeteria.

A voluntary agreement was worked out between then health minister Bob McClelland — himself a three pack a day man until he quit in 1977 — and John Fryer, general secretary of the B.C. Government Employees Union.

A six-month trial of the ban started July 1, 1979.

The experiment appears to be a failure, according to what senior civil servants of the health ministry and other sources tell the Times.

Health Minister Rafe Mair is being asked to negotiate a mandatory ban on cigarettes with the BCGEU.

The policy worked for a while, as the ministry juggled desks and accommodated some heavy smokers by allowing them to take their work to one of the smoking areas.

But it began to break down because a small group of smokers refused to go along. Peer group pressure and moral suasion turned out to be ineffectual weapons against the clouds of blue smoke.

"The voluntary program is in very shaky condition," said Jack Bainbridge, assistant deputy minister of health in charge of support services.

Shannon Roach shows the power of TLC on her plants

Plants have feelings too, Grade 6 experiment finds

By PAUL MINVIELLE

Shannon Roach has never read The Secret Life of Plants but her recent science fair project has turned her into a believer in plant consciousness.

The 12-year-old Grade 6 student has just finished an experiment with two African violet plants that she feels proves that plants respond to TLC — tender loving care.

Talking nicely to plants to encourage them isn't new but Shannon decided to see what difference there would be between a plant that was sweet-talked and another that was bad-mouthed.

The two plants were watered and fed equally.

Shannon spoke sweetly to Plant 1, telling it how beautiful it was and occasionally playing music on the stereo for it.

But she snarled at Plant 2, telling it what rotten vegetation it was and that it looked like a wicked weed.

Three weeks later Plant 1 was healthy, heavily leaved and loaded with a dozen beautiful blossoms.

Plant 2 was scraggly, its four blossoms wilted.

"It looked like it was dying," Shannon said.

So does Shannon have plans to become a mad scientist?

"I want to be a florist or a flower arranger like my aunt."

No Iran forces PM tells U.S.

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau said today he strongly opposes any military action against Iran and he made that clear to U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance.

"I certainly view with a great deal of apprehension any possibility of military action," Trudeau said at a news conference 24 hours after private talks here with Vance.

President Jimmy Carter said a week ago that if political and economic sanctions by the United States and its allies fail to bring about the release of American hostages in Tehran "then the only next step that is available, that I can see, would be some sort of military action."

The Canadian government expelled an Iranian diplomat and announced trade restrictions against Iran during Vance's visit, saying the diplomatic and economic sanctions will be tightened further if the hostages are not released by May 17.

IOC seeks talks with U.S., Russia

The Associated Press

International Olympic officials have called for face-to-face meetings in hopes of settling the many conflicts related to the crumbling Moscow Summer Games.

Lord Killanin, president of the International Olympic Committee, offered Wednesday to meet U.S. President Carter and Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev in a bid to salvage the Games, threatened by a multi-country boycott.

He reiterated that the Olympic Games "are the property of the IOC and not of the host country.

The IOC, after three days of talks in Lausanne, told each national Olympic committee that athletes could be sent to the Games without using their national flags.

Killanin sent telegrams to Carter and Brezhnev after receiving a message from Carter praising the value of the Olympic movement.

"I cannot make peace, but at least I can't make things worse than they are," the Irishman said.

The IOC announcement on national flags apparently came after Soviet Olympic officials adopted a conciliatory attitude at the meeting in hopes that it would help as many athletes as possible come to Moscow for the Games.

In other Olympic developments, China's Olympic committee has decided not to send athletes to Moscow unless the Soviet troops are withdrawn by May 24.

The South Korean government told the Korean Olympic Committee it would be advisable for Korea to boycott.

The Japan Olympic Committee confirmed that it favors, in principle, that the country compete in the Games. The JOC's temporary stand, which could be reversed when a final decision is made by the middle of June, contradicts the Japanese government's position.

Thirty-six of the 143 countries invited to participate in the Moscow Games now have indicated they are ready to follow the American plea and boycott.

The German national committee is due to make its decision on May 15 and the result is crucial because France and some other North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) countries are awaiting the outcome before committing themselves.

Eastern bloc luring Iran

Times News Services

TEHRAN — Iran appeared to be moving closer to communist Eastern Bloc countries today in retaliation for U.S. reprisals and the threat of additional Western sanctions for the holding of the American hostages.

A Soviet trade delegation was already in Tehran and a number of accords have been reached at an official level, an Iranian official said.

The official said an Iranian ministerial team planned to visit the Soviet Union soon to delve deeper into economic cooperation and international trade.

In another sign of a blossoming relationship between Iran and the Soviet Union, state-run Radio Moscow reported today that Iran has been given permission to use Russian territory as an overland trade route "in case of emergency."

And in Tehran, Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh said Iran will block the Persian Gulf so no oil gets out from anywhere if the United States mines Iranian ports.

He did not say how Iran would block the Gulf but the Strait of Hormoz, which is at the mouth of the Gulf, is only a narrow opening.

These developments came as Iran took other major moves aimed at closer economic relationship with Eastern Bloc members, including announcing trade agreements Wednesday with East Germany and Romania.

The government also established diplomatic relations with South Yemen, the only Marxist state in the Arab world.

In a related development, the National Guidance Ministry announced plans to expel American reporters from Iran for a second time.

The position of the 50 Americans held hostage by Islamic militants at the U.S. Embassy for 173 days seemed to have reached a virtual statemate, with no new initiatives in sight.

Battling between Islamic and left-wing students at universities around the country appeared to be easing off and there were no immediate reports of any fresh outbreaks.

While Iran openly shifted its foreign policy toward the Eastern Bloc, it withheld comment on Japanese and European Economic Community endorsement of American sanctions.

Scattered reports from Iran's western frontier said fighting between Kurdish insurgents seeking autonomy and government forces has not abated.

One report said the death toll within the past 24 hours was 40.

At least 13 students were known to have died during the days of rioting following the government's decision to close down political offices on campuses, but unconfirmed reports said the death toll could be much higher, with the injured reaching 1,000.

The government, which temporarily closed all universities while it called in national guardsmen to break up clashes, lifted the ban and allowed them to reopen but because of the official mourning day, no classes were held.

Break-in suspect questioned

Sooke RCMP are questioning a suspect in connection with an overnight break-in at People's Drug Mart in Sooke.

The man was picked up after store owners at a Sooke shopping centre complained he was making a nuisance of himself.

The spokesman said officers searched the man and seized some drugs.

The drug store break-in was discovered at about 6 a.m. by an officer on routine patrol.

The front door had been smashed and a hole chopped in the roof.

Saudi king stays home

LONDON (AP) — Saudi Arabian King Khaled, still angered over the British screening of a film dramatization of the execution of an adulterous Saudi princess, has shelved plans for a state visit this year to Britain, government sources said today.

In addition, they said, British Defence Secretary Francis Pym postponed a visit this week to Jidda, Saudi Arabia. And a Saudi minister canceled arrangements to negotiate a $625,000 contract with a British institution to set up a centre for higher education in the oil-rich kingdom, where more than 20,000 Britons are working on special projects.

A weak front pushing across B.C. today produced spotty showers over most regions this morning but a ridge rebuilding behind the system was expected to return generally sunny skies to all but southeastern portions of the province this afternoon and evening. A few thundershowers may occur over southeastern portions of the interior as moist, unstable air continues to feed northward across the U.S. border. The next approaching system is expected to spread rain onto the B.C. coast Friday.

LETHBRIDGE, Alta. — There is on the parched plain of southern Alberta 60 miles from the Montana border, one of the more spectacular hotels in Canada.

The Lethbridge Lodge, like some medieval courtyard, is built with an outer border of rooms around a four-storey-high shell that is filled with burbling streams, babbling bartenders, bridges, restaurants and a thick jungle of tropical plants and trees that soar past your balcony.

At first glance, it is Tarzan gone upscale suburbanite.

In this lush prosperity of frolicking conventioneers, the new owners of the piggy bank of Canadian resources have been in session, wagging their frontier fingers at Rene Levesque and turning into instant experts on national unity, a subject hitherto neglected in the stretch run to the seperendum date of May 20.

When the premiers of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia sat down at the jungle poolside for a heralded hour-long TV interview that was broadcast across three provinces, they rather resembled the junior executive version of the Stanley expedition in search of Dr. Livingstone.

What they didn't know is that they were sitting on an artificial turf cover over the Jacuzzi pool and those of us who are optimists waited in vain for a TV epic made memorable by the steam from the Jacuzzi rising slowly round their $25 hair styles — Dante's Inferno come to the tube.

The theme would have been appropriate stage effects for the ensuing rhetoric, which threatened to parch the leaves of most of the foliage between here and Missoula, Mont.

What we have here over three days is two things: a flexing of the Alberta host muscle and an attempt — belated, it says here — to gallop into the posse trying to cut the Parti Quebecois off at the pass. What is interesting (and encouraging) is to see for the first time a fair contingent of talented Francophone reporters suddenly interested in what their quasi-rebellious compartriots beyond Kenora are thinking. La Presse is here for the first time, along with close to 10 other French-language media types.

B.C.'s Bill Bennett had to adjourn his legislature for this conference for fear of being overthrown like some out-of-town Moroccan prince — and then has been distracted by hometown news stories of cabinet ministers gossiping about his bankrupt charisma. He has a delegation of 16.

Saskatchewan's Allan Blakeney, the one westerner who has earned respect in Quebec, has a modest 12.

Manitoba's Sterling Lyon, attempting to prove like Ronnie Reagan that government can be run out of the hip pocket, has a lonely six bodies including himself.

Peter Lougheed's Alberta, which gives the appearance of having bodyguards to protect their bodyguards? Thirty people.

A press room? Nineteen red IBM Selectrics packed so cheek-to-jowl as to be inoperable, but evidence to foreigners that the expenditure is close to the P.E.I. provincial debt.

The premiers, run by their host, of course will not open their sessions to the 100 or so ink-stained wretches attracted to this pre-referendum thumbsucker.

Lougheed will not listen to the pleas of the Quebec reporters about deadlines that would get his message into the papers and newscasts he is supposedly aiming at.

To backstop their lectures to the Quebecois, the four owners of Depression Revenge now must try to demonstrate their dedication to a Quebec-threatened country.

Premier Bennett, who didn't bother to vote in the federal election, will make a belated May 12 address to the Montreal Board of Trade.

Lougheed, in his grim-jawed way, a former lightweight halfback who is not going to be pushed around any more, warns that Ottawa will make "the tragic miscalulation" if it underestimates his province's potential for retaliation in case things go wrong in the argument over resources.

What depresses, really, is the western premiers' communique warning that the people of Quebec "should" — that favorite hectoring word of editorial pages — "be fully aware of the determined opposition of western Canadians" to sovereignty-association.

When you come in late in the game I'm not sure lecturing is the most productive tactic.

Faulty N-plant?

SCOTTSBORO, Ala. (AP) — The Tennessee Valley Authority ordered a contractor at its Bellefonte Nuclear Plant to stop work Wednesday after reports of discrepancies in quality control in construction of reactor containment buildings.

Bootleg war declared

BELLA BELLA (CP) — Indians of the Bella Bella band on the central B.C. coast say they have taken stern measures to get rid of bootleggers who supply liquor to local Indian youths.

The bootleggers, many of them members of the island reserve community of 1,200 persons, will be denied housing and other services provided by the band.

Band manager Cameron Brown, announcing a seven-point action program authorized at a special band council meeting this week, said some children as young as 10 have been caught up in the drinking problem.

The special meeting followed a community meeting Saturday at which recommendations were put forward to stop what chief councillor Ed Newman described recently as a growing liquor abuse problem.

Brown said known bootleggers will be evicted from council-owned residences in the community.

Earth opens, he moves

FRUITVALE (CP) — Local resident Michael Newman, who saw a crack 800 metres long open on a steep slope near his home about 10 days ago, is moving away from the brink.

In the process he is also cooling some brinkmanship with B.C. Hydro, the provincially-owned corporation which owns the nearby Seven Mile Dam on the Pend d'Oreille River near Trail in the Kootenays.

It began when B.C. Hydro, generating power at the earth-fill dam, drew the reservoir down to its lowest level since the structure was completed in 1978.

The crack, up to 15 centimetres wide in places, quietly opened in the earth on a hillside about 800 metres behind the dam. It also opened about nine metres from Newman's house, which is perched on a clay-based bench about 20 metres above the high water mark of the reservoir and about 135 metres away from it.

After they were informed, B.C. Hydro engineers feared the possibility of a slumping of the hillside, a common geological event along the valleys of the Pend d'Oreille and Columbia rivers which at one time were a lake bed. The crack posed a threat to the Newman house, but Hydro officials said it was no danger to the dam or to electrical power generation.

They tried to persuade Newman to move out of the home into a mobile trailer but he declined because he had no agreement for compensation with the Crown utility.

But after about 10 days of persuasion, Newman has taken the bait and moved into a rented mobile home at Hydro's expense about 130 metres back from the fissure.

"We're not worried about the crack now," said a Hydro spokesman in Vancouver on Wednesday, "but we don't want to be in a risk situation.

Newman says Hydro officials are being very co-operative. "I guess Hydro has decided it is wise to be reasonable about it."

Meanwhile, Hydro engineers have continued to monitor the crack but dry weather in recent days has eased the danger of the ground slumping. Wet weather combined with spring runoff could have been a problem.

Verigin Jr. guilty in pot case

ROSSLAND (CP) — The son of Doukhobor leader John J. Verigin was found guilty Wednesday on two charges of possession of narcotics, paving the way for his trial on trafficking charges to proceed.

John J. Verigin Jr., 24, of Grand Forks, is charged with possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking and possession of marijuana resin for the purpose of trafficking.

A trafficking trial is divided into two sections, with possession having to be proved first. Verigin's trial on the traficking portion will continue Sept. 15.

Verigin was charged Nov. 16, 1978, after police seized about a half a pound of Colombian marijuana and 21 vials of hashish oil at his father's home.

When the trial began earlier this month, Verigin's lawyer, Harry Rankin, had argued that the drug charges should be dismissed because police placed a wiretap on the elder Verigin's home.

RCMP had tapped the telephone of the elder Verigin, honorary chairman of the Orthodox Doukhobor sect, during an investigation into allegations he conspired to commit arson.

Existence of the tap was not disclosed to the jury which last fall found the elder Verigin not guilty of the arson charges.

PROFITS AT WORK
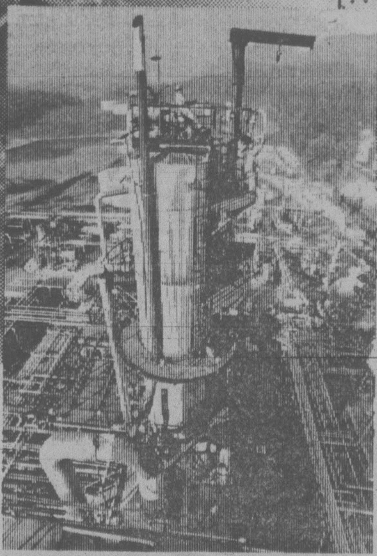
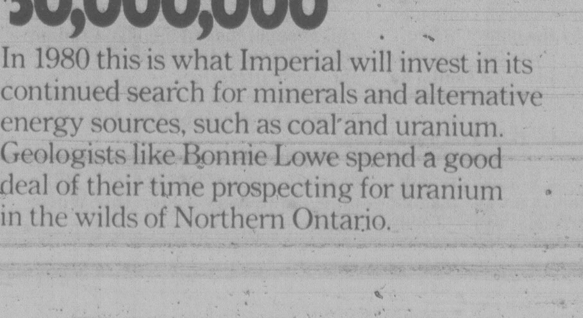
PROFITS MAKE THIS POSSIBLE

$400,000,000
This is what Imperial will spend in exploration for new energy supplies in 1980. Drillers like Eldun Tegler are working hard to find near term supplies of oil and gas in Western Canada. Much of the investment will be accounted for by this activity; the remainder will finance exploration towards long term Canadian energy security.

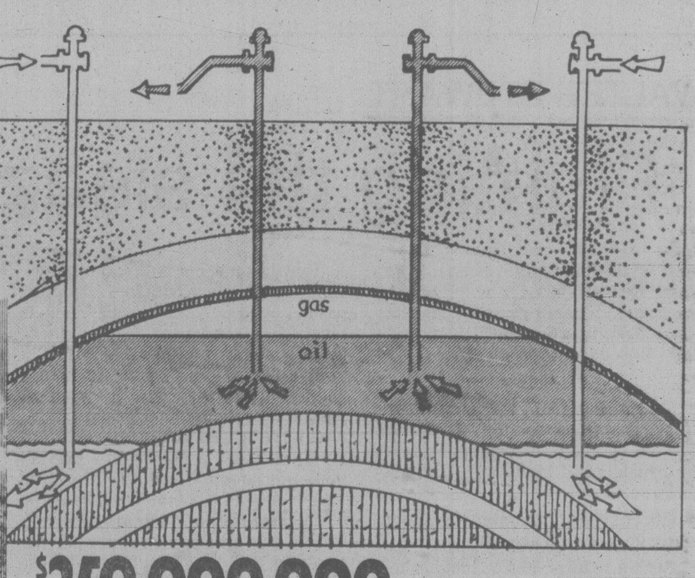
$150,000,000
Imperial will spend this in the development of Alberta's oil sands: The projects are massive and demand complex new technology. At Cold Lake, for example, high pressure steam is used to remove the bitumen-like substance from deep in the ground. When completed this project will cost a staggering $7 billion.



$150,000,000
This investment covers a wide variety of projects. For example in 1980 we will be both improving pollution controls and significantly reducing energy consumption at all our refineries.



$50,000,000
In 1980 this is what Imperial will invest in its continued search for minerals and alternative energy sources, such as coal and uranium. Geologists like Bonnie Lowe spend a good deal of their time prospecting for uranium in the wilds of Northern Ontario.



$250,000,000
This will be Imperial's investment in maintaining and improving production from existing wells. For example, we are using a variety of methods to squeeze more oil out of old wells; it's technically complex and very expensive.

When you think new energy, think billions.
Imperial is investing heavily in Canada to develop new energy supplies. In fact, over the next decade our investment could total $15 billion. Without profits it would be impossible to make this kind of investment in Canada's energy future.

A bald tire

Federal Industry Minister Herb Gray tells us that the North American auto industry is cyclical. At the moment it's on the downside and the bottom is not in sight.

In the midst of layoffs affecting thousands of Canadian and American assembly line workers, Gray and his cabinet colleagues appear to be giving a sympathetic ear to Chrysler Canada's request for $550 million dollars in government subsidies and loan guarantees.

If there were any indication that the recent nosedive of the auto industry could be considered part of a normal business cycle, then the Canadian taxpayers might be willing to help this auto giant with a one-shot loan to bridge a short-term economic gap.

This slump, however, is rooted in market conditions that have replaced forever those of the 1960s and '70s. The government should be hesitant about retreading a company that failed to forecast the massive swing in consumer preference to fuel-efficient cars.

The changing market circumstances dictated by Middle East oil prices and higher interest rates have signalled the necessity for a complete re-orientation by North American automakers. Although Ford, American Motors and General Motors are facing sagging sales and employee layoffs, all three anticipated the swing to conservation. Chrysler did not.

This must be balanced by the effect on Canadian employment if the company folds. Chrysler has already laid off 4,000 of its 14,500 Canadian employees. It has guaranteed 6,000 new jobs in two new plants if Ottawa approves the subsidy scheme.

The problem is that Chrysler can guarantee very little. If the company fails in its drive towards efficiency or incorrectly forecasts future market trends, guarantees will hold little meaning in a bankruptcy sale.

Gray cannot ignore the federal and Ontario governments' experience with Ford. Two years ago the company received $68 million in federal and provincial subsidies to locate a new engine plant in Windsor. Although investment and jobs for a specific plant were guaranteed, no commitment was made to maintain Ford's existing Canadian plants and workforce.

The company announced last week that 3,500 Ontario auto workers were to be laid off because of dropping sales in the United States.

Gray, of course, argues that the Canadian employment situation would have been worse had the $68 million not been allocated. That may be so, but the intention of Ottawa and Queen's Park was to add jobs to the existing workforce.

The evidence is that car sales are dropping. People are making do with older vehicles. Fuel-efficient cars are cornering the new car market. There is no reason to suspect this trend will change in light of rising gasoline prices and with the American economy teetering on the brink of recession.

To pump $550 million into Chrysler is in fact a corporate welfare payment. It might be the best way to support the company's Canadian employees. But it might also be wiser to invest the money in another labor-intensive industry. There might even be more value in using the money to retrain and relocate auto workers so they can find employment that offers promise for the future.

How solid is solid?

Science Minister Pat McGeer is unhappy about reports that some members of the Social Credit caucus are displeased with the leadership of Premier Bill Bennett.

"The truth is that you have 31 government members as solid as anyone I've seen in 20 years in government," McGeer said this week.

Probably so, Pat, probably so. But compared to what?

After all, most of your years in the legislature were spent in a hopelessly fractured and divided Liberal caucus. And much of your own time as Liberal leader was occupied by a continuing battle with the then-president of the party, Mel Couvelier.

Come to think of it Pat, the situation does seem more solid today — at least from your perspective.

Fighting the sleaze factor

Actually, it's the sleaze factor.

But there he is, and as long as he's there, U.S. voters must confront the fact that a major contender for the highest elective office on the planet is known as a liar, a womanizer, a cheat, and an opportunist.

Nine hours

The reference is to the night of July 18, 1969, when he drove off a bridge and left his car, with Mary Jo Kopechne trapped inside, in the water, a circumstance he didn't get around to reporting until nine hours later.

To explain how he happened to leave a drowning girl behind, Kennedy advanced a whole raft of reasons, most of them contradictory, and none of them credible. Finally he gave up, and now all he says is that whatever he did or didn't do that night was only part of his record. He should be judged on his entire record.

Fair enough.

He was thrown out of Harvard for cheating, and that is part of his record. (He was re-admitted later).

When he perceived a chance to snatch the Democratic nomination from Carter last fall — Kennedy was ahead in the polls — he adjusted his political stance to the right, and began to clamour for more defense spending. Then, when he faded in the polls, and it appeared his best chance was to attack Carter from the left, he adjusted back again. Those shifts, too, are part of his record.

During 1979, Kennedy voted for Carter proposals 58 times in the Senate, and against him only 10 times. Now he charges up and down the country condemning in strident tones projects that he helped put in place.

But it is not his political slipperiness that hurts Kennedy — suppleness is as important to politicians as biceps to blacksmiths. Rather, there is an uneasy feeling that he is a spoiled brat who grew up into a spoiled man, and not the kind of person who should be president.

There's always an argument about whether a politician's private behavior should disqualify him. The Yeas argue that a man who cheats on his wife probably cheats. Period. That a man who panics under private pressure will do so in public under the unbearable tensions of world leadership

The Nays argue that what a man does at home may have nothing to do with what he does at work. Like Superman, he sheds one suit and dons another, and changes his persona with his pants.

EDWARD KENNEDY
. . . long way to go

Perhaps.

But there is something eerie about a debate over whether the flawed character of a presidential contender can be mended by the glue of office.

In Kennedy's case the question arises because, with all his faults, he has a public aura and a charisma that set him apart.

He is a Kennedy, raised on royal jelly, suckled on command. He is about as subtle as a hand grenade, and until now he has always made it clear that what Teddy wants, Teddy gets. He became the junior senator from Massachusetts, at age 30 — the youngest senator ever. He took on the mantle as his right, like a duke succeeding to the title, and immediately began to push for more power.

That was in 1962, and he has never stopped pushing and he has never offered any reason why he should have more power, except that he deserved it. Throughout his travails, and they have been many, he has always exuded self-confidence, the way other people shed sweat.

And yet, his record as a senator is notable more for maneuvering than for legislative achievements. The one issue on which he has campaigned constantly for 18 years — national health insurance — is just about where it was when he began.

Early in his career, an opponent assured him that if he had been born Edward Moore instead of Edward Moore Kennedy, he wouldn't stand a chance in politics. That may be unfair. With his rugged good looks, klaxon-edged voice and easy charm, to say nothing of all that money, he has political qualifications.

Just the same, without his name, he might be set down as merely another senator on a power trip.

A man whose wife has to be hauled out of sanctuary to explain her alcoholism has a public relations problem.

Dumb ad

And every time Kennedy puts one of his nearest and dearest up to cadge votes (he has 25, count 'em, family members working on his campaign) he reminds voters that he has never denied himself anything and his relatives foot the bills.

One of his TV ads shows a lady tennis player whose voice-over comentary has a lot of nice things to say about Teddy. As the camera closes in, she turns out to be not his wife, Joan, but his sister-in-law, Ethel. The clip is a reminder of Joan's frailty and his own sensitivity. It is an appallingly dumb ad.

Judged as a senator, Kennedy did well enough, judged against a fading and ineffectual President Carter, he appeared attractive.

But judged as a future president, he has yet to escape the sleaze factor.

His victory in Pennsylvannia will keep him scrambling but he is still a long, long way from the White House.

Independent allies can help

WASHINGTON — America's allies are getting a bad press around here these days for failing to line up behind President Carter's policies on Iran and Afghanistan, but lately they have been helpful to the United States in several different but unpublicized ways.

For example, it is known that Soviet officials have recently suggested to the French that conversations could now be started for new peace and security arrangements in the area of the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf.

The Soviet official called the attention of the French to a manifesto recently circulated by the government of Afghanistan in Kabul. This proposed talks between Afghanistan and Pakistan and between Afghanistan and Iran on the normalization of relations between their countries.

Diplomatic feelers

It suggested that these nations confer without prior conditions on the possibility of reducing military expenses, military forces and hostile propaganda.

Finally, and of particular interest in Washington, the manifesto proposed that there should be conversations about the creation of a "peace zone" among the states bordering on the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf and the reduction of forces by states from outside this region, followed by international guarantees of the security of the entire area.

The Soviet official indicated to the French that his government approved of the points in this manifesto (in fact, it was worded in such a way that it seemed to have been written originally in Russian), but said nothing about the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan.

Andrei Gromyko, the Soviet foreign minister, will be in Paris this week and will no doubt be asked for a clarification of all this. The French ambassador to Washington left for Paris Tuesday afternoon.

This is not to suggest that we're on the verge of some kind of settlement of the Afghan war, though Soviet ambassadors seldom initiate such conversations and mention such things in the course of idle talk. It could mean very little or a great deal. The point here is merely that allies can often be more useful when they're independent.

The meeting of the European foreign ministers in Luxembourg this week also illustrates the point. They came up with a formula for saving President Carter's face in Iran while saving their own necks. It was the diplomatic equivalent of the basketball stall or slow offense designed to kill time.

The allies had a problem. They were uncomfortable sitting on the sidelines and watching Jimmy Carter fighting the battle of the hostages, and in the process stumbling in frustration toward military action against Iran. So they finally decided to join him part way, in order to restrain him.

Carter's view was that his patience was being mocked in Iran, and what bothered him even more, in the Pennsylvania primary election. The time had come, he decided, to "punish" and "isolate" Iran and shame the allies into withdrawing their embassies, trade and world communications, thus cutting off all the divided political factions in Iran from diplomatic and commercial contact with the major nations of the world.

Except, the allies pointed out, this wouldn't isolate them from Moscow. If the allies in Europe, along with Japan, withdrew their embassies and their trade, the allies insisted, then the Soviet Union, which already has a "friendship mission" in Tehran, and new Red Army contingents on Iran's northern border, would undoubtedly be willing to take care of all the Iranian imports and all the Iranian exports, including oil, cut off by the proposed Carter boycott.

Of course, the White House — though not necessarily the State Department — would have preferred that the allies line up behind the president, and do precisely as he requested, but they have gone along with him just enough to ease their own consciences, yet with just enough rope to hold him back from some impetuous military move against Iran in the middle of the presidential campaign.

No doubt they had other more selfish motives, but they don't like to be provoked into diplomatic and economic sanctions without consultation, or committed to "some kind of military action," without knowing what that might be. The allies keep insisting that their governments were not elected to assure the re-election of Jimmy Carter.

This point irritates the Carter people, particularly when it's made by the Giscard d'Estaing government in Paris, which thinks it helps them with the Gaullists to be vaguely hostile to Washington.

French rescue

But the other day, the U.S. ambassador in Chad, Donald R. Norland, and 29 other Americans were surrounded by hostile forces at the U.S. Embassy in that central African county. The French government sent a military column to the capital city of N'dganena, flew some of the Americans to Douala, the capital of Cameroon, and assisted others to find refuge by land and river boat across the border in Cameroon.

Otherwise we might have had another "hostage" problem in Chad as well as in Iran and Colombia. Even the White House was grateful to the French for this, but somehow not grateful enough to make any public mention of it.

No absurdity

"Absurdity over abortions," the headline of a recent editorial in The Times, seems a strange choice of words concerning a matter of life and death, even though the first paragraph disclaims any ethical considerations.

Abortion might be called an overriding interest in preserving the health of the mother. It could be called a way of upgrading the environment, as we all agree there seem to be too many people on the planet. Or it could be called, as it is by some of us, killing those who can in no way defend themselves.

To use the word "absurdity" to describe the stricter view of Victoria General's abortion committee versus the more "liberal" view of Jubilee's abortion committee seems to me a step towards trivializing the grave matter of life and death.

"The solution," the editorial states, "lies in changes to the federal abortion laws to ensure that the standards for abortion are uniform — at the least, across a region." But morals cannot be legislated and the word "health," especially mental or emotional health is particularly hard to define.

An historian, writing for The Times, has stated that many of the anti-abortionists' arguments appear to be based on the assumption "that the inducement of miscarriage has been viewed always and everywhere in the western world as evil. A cursory review of the literature reveals that this was not so."

The Hippocratic oath states: "I will not help a woman to abort." But not everyone shared the ideals of the Hippocratic oath and it is undoubtedly true that, to many, abortion was not looked upon as evil. The fact that many of us now believe it to be so may be considered a sign of increasing humanism.

Times do change and there are other increases of an increase in humanism in comparatively recent times, as for example, our changed attitude towards slavery.

Expediential as statements supporting slavery may sound to us now, they may in future seem no more so than some of the statements of pro-abortionists, such as the statement that "a woman should have the right to control her own body." The larger issue is whether she has the right to control the body of the fetus. — J. E. Richey, Victoria.

Petition success

On April 11, presentation of 830,000 signatures on the People to People Petition for Canadian Unity to the people of Quebec in a public ceremony at Place Ville Marie square in Montreal was an outstanding success in meeting the objectives of the organizers, contrary to a Canadian Press and one national TV report.

The Quebec news media gave the presentation wide picture and story coverage, as hoped for, including the noisy shouting of two self-identified Communist groups who were obviously disturbed by the idea that Quebecers might get to know that so many Canadians want Canada to stay together.

A scroll was also presented by mayors from Victoria to St. John's, Nfld. containing the endorsement of nearly 1,000 city, town and village councils outside Quebec, representing over 11 million Canadians in their communities. Many Montrealers voiced their deep appreciation of our coming to Quebec.

News reports neglected to mention that the campaign for signatures will continue until close to referendum day when a further presentation will be made to the people of Quebec in a manner to be announced.

All those on the national committee are deeply grateful to the hundreds of people who worked so hard voluntarily to make the petition possible. — Keith Cowan, Co-chairman, People to People Petition for Canadian Unity, 205 Seafield Road, Victoria.

Decriminalize pot

I note with interest that in the Liberal Speech from the Throne, the government promises the decriminalization of marijuana. Although the first time mentioned in a Throne Speech, this is not a new promise; in fact it is 10 years old.

After countless investigations and thousands of dollars spent it is time for action. Far too many people, especially youths, have been penalized for life by using or experimenting with pot, the same as others use alcohol. I do not condone the use of marijuana, but like our other 'social vices', shouldn't use be up to the individual? Let's hope the Liberals are serious this time. — Stuart MacKinnon, 411C Vancouver Street.

Questionable

In reference to the front page story April 17 "Union Paints . . ." there are times when the objectives of unionism are questionable.

When members of a union apparently endorse vandalism, it is time for all union supporters to re-examine their ethics. — William R. Spiller, 97 Howe Street.

'Leave the bones'

BEACH 'MUSEUMS'

By VIC BELL

(Bell lives at North Beach in the Queen Charlotte Islands. He wrote this for the locally-produced periodical, All Alone Stone.)

Casual beachcombing has long been a pastime associated with freedom and the peacefulness of roaming windswept shores, occasionally fulfilling individual esthetics with shell, agate or feathers.

Like many, I've found that an occasional purging of accumulated treasures is necessary. I have an agate bag already full, necessitating choice; losers go back to the beach for additional tumbling on ocean's wheel.

So I try to practise restraint, soothing itchy fingers and filling my pack by picking up litter. I'm usually specific in my litter prices. A half mile of roadside in Hawaii yielded a six-foot chain of beer can pop-tops; a recent west coast trip gleaned a hundred styrofoam cups, evidence of an opening for the fishing fleet. On the same trip I looked up the beach to see a friend staggering towards me under the 96-pound bulk of a sperm whale fin bone.

My reactions were definitely mixed. I tried dissuading him by pointing out the enormity of the task facing him, but could see every word building his resolve. The thought of that bone being carried off the coast and taken eventually to Victoria rubbed me wrong. I knew that every treasure I'd ever carried to my home had lost something in the change. Their appeal had not disappeared; I could still feel pleasure in holding them, but their aura sustained by winds and ocean roar had faded.

So there I stood with feathers in my hat and an eagle skull in my pack wondering "Where do we draw the line?" For the whale bone, bulk should have answered that question and certainly would have for most people, yet here was a man with the determination and physical ability to carry it away. I thought too of a group the previous summer who had found no fault in "beachcombing" with Zodiacs, saws and winches taking whale skulls and whole trunks of petrified trees. Few would ever suspect that petrified wood existed on the Islands, and if that was a sole deposit none will ever again share that knowledge or thrill of discovery. So too it seemed with this whale bone.

One is not likely to see the beached remains of a sperm whale more than once a lifetime. The few large whales that somehow escaped the harpooners' gun, the rendering pots and bone crushers, to find a natural resting place on a wilderness coastline, seem as priceless as the totem poles that have survived the ravages of missionaries, collectors and archeologists to still stand in the old Haida village sites.

My friend struggled with that bone from 4 a.m. to late the same day over nearly impossible terrain, only to be greeted in Masset by yet another confrontaton. It was bad enough that the whale bone had been removed from the west coast and its natural resting place, but there was adamant opposition to removing it from the Charlottes. Our friend sincerely assured us how he would treasure his find, but we envisioned the bone, eventually propped in a corner gathering dust, or being used as a table, spotted with candle wax and spilled beer. In the end a decision was made to leave the bone with the Islands' museum as an exhibit; an example perhaps, of the question at hand — where do we draw the line?

Perhaps a beachcombing ethic could begin by leaving the fossil records and natural history specimens intact, and salvaging only flotsam and jetsam. Roam, explore and tread lightly. Your discoveries are exhibits . . . the shores are our outdoor museum.

English usage: Don't panic yet

By ROBERT FULFORD

Toronto Star

On the dust-jacket of Richard Mitchell's book, Less Than Words Can Say (McClelland & Stewart, $11.25) there's a quote from the TV news commentator Edwin Newman: If English can be saved, he (Mitchell) will be one of its saviors."

That's the way people speak of English today — as something that needs saving, like the whales: From everywhere the reports are bad. Jargon steadily gains ground, the teaching of grammar disappears from the schools, illiteracy surrounds us. The barbarians are at the gates.

For a few writers, deploring the state of English has become a subprofession. Edwin Newman wrote two best-sellers, Strictly Speaking and A Civil Tongue, poking fun at misuse of English. William Safire writes a weekly column on the subject for The New York Times. John Simon for a while wrote an Esquire column. And Richard Mitchell, from Glassboro State College, issues a widely publicized little magazine, The Underground Grammarian, dedicated to stamping out improper usage.

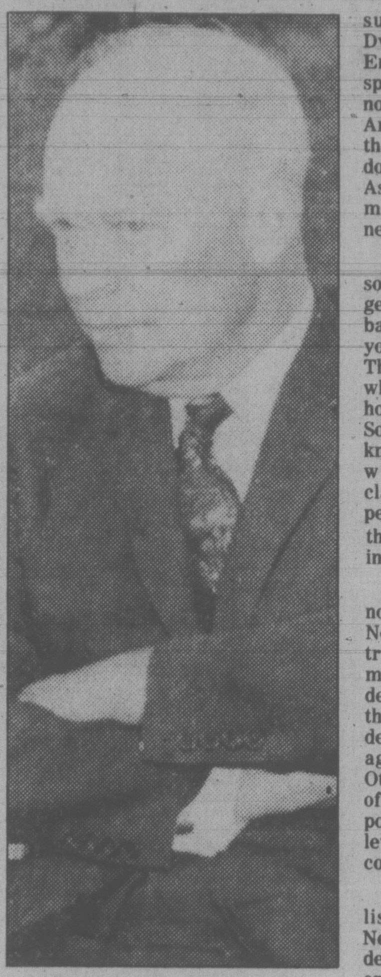
What was once no more than a pastime for retired teachers who liked to write letters-to-the-editor has now turned into a passionate crusade.

Of all the writers on English usage who have appeared in recent years, Richard Mitchell is at once the most entertaining and the most depressing. His central principle is clear: Words are at the core of human life and those who cannot use them properly cannot live fully. A mistake in English usage is as serious as a mistake in the design of an aircraft or a mistake in the filling of a drug prescription, because:

"Words never fail . . . they enter into the mind and become part of us for as long as we shall live. Who speaks reason to his fellow men bestows it upon them. Who mouths inanity disorders thought for all who listen." And: "Irrationality, like buried chemical waste, sooner or later must seep into all the tissues of thought."

Mitchell's writing is persuasive, particularly for those who live by words, and he almost always makes good sense. But the apocalyptic air of his book — and the widespread view typified by the quotation from Newman — produce in me a desire to consider the matter in another way.

For the most part, the English-speaking world is ruled by the mumblers, the jargon-speakers, the semiliterates, the obsessive users of passive verb forms. Those who are equipped to do so look on political language with great and satisfying scorn. It's not been proven, though, that politicians would run the world better if they spoke clearly and understood precisely what they said.



IKE . . . language isn't all

William Davis has been premier of Ontario for a long time. He can't speak English to save his soul, but he remains in office. (He might be less successful if he spoke clearly.) Dwight Eisenhower spoke wretched English every day of his life, and his speech-writers were clods; but he's now seen as a reasonably successful American president. There are even those who say he showed more wisdom on certain matters — war in Asia, for example — than his much more literate successor, John Kennedy.

Richard Mitchell argues that if someone uses English badly it suggests that he will do something else badly. If you are careless in writing you will be careless in other matters. This is an attractive idea to people who love the language; it is not, however, a case that can be proven. Some of the most careful people I know are unable to write a sentence without misplacing modifying clauses. Some of the most literate people I know are careless in everything from driving their cars to rearing their children.

On the use of English, the news is not nearly so bad as writers like Newman and Mitchell suggest. It's true that the universities produce many illiterates, some with graduate degrees in English, and it's true that the language of bureaucracy is in decline. There was a time, not long ago, when a senior bureaucrat in Ottawa was required to be something of a writer. Nowadays the dullest porridge is acceptable, right up to the level of cabinet documents and royal commission reports.

But in many ways the use of English has improved in this period. Newspapers, for instance, are a good deal better written than they were 20 or 30 years ago (see, most spectacularly, the sports pages and the family pages). And my opinion is that the everyday reporters on television in 1980 speak a better English — firmer, clearer, more expressive — than the radio reporters I heard in my youth in the 1940s and '50s. Not everything has changed for the worse.

Mitchell provokes argument because he brings to his work a laudable anger. He's the moralist of syntax, the holy prophet of the simple declarative sentence. In the acceptance of Black English by some American schools and colleges he sees something like a plot: Encouraging blacks to use nonstandard ghetto English will only limit their possibilities and keep them in their place. And he rightly sees that the language of bureaucrats is not merely an ignorant jargon. "What they are doing is not haphazard," he suggests. If they hide their meaning they have good reasons for doing so.

He makes the same point, with more venom, when he deals with the jargon of lawyers. We laugh at it, he says — we cast ourselves as simple-folk who can see through the obfuscations of the courts. Nevertheless, we view it with terror when it touches us. Mitchell's brief elaboration of that point sums up his belief that we can understand our lives only as we understand the language around us.

"We always remember," he writes, "that if we can't figure out from their (lawyers') language what we're required to do, and if we therefore fail to do it, it isn't the writers of the jargon who will be called to account . . . In fact, when we read the contract, we are afraid. It is the intent of that language to make us afraid. It works. Now that is effective writing."

The too-candid camera

LONDON — The news that it is now possible in certain American sporting clubs to put coins in a slot and play back a TV picure of yourself in action is supposed to be giving hope to golfers and tennis players everywhere.

Now at last they will be able to see where their swing went wrong, why they wobble so with their backhand, or just how badly they failed to keep their heads down when driving off the tee. But the uses of the new toy may go a lot further than just the games you can decently play in public.

The video see-yourself-in-action machines have been used for ages, of course, in other forms of teaching. Highly placed executives whose companies suspect they would look idiotic if they ever appeared on TV are frequently sent on courses to show them how to behave.

Vice-presidents see themselves sitting nervously on the edges of chairs, looking like guilty schoolboys or lolling back superciliously and repelling two million viewers in 30 seconds; appalled, the men can see their shifty little eyes darting to and fro and realize that unless they can drop the habit nobody will ever believe a single word they say.

Doctors, too, are trained at some British universities by being shown on video what they are really like when interviewing patients. What comes across with shattering clarity, not just to the trainee doctors but to the rest of the class, is how bad they are at actually extracting information. They look bored — and the patient feels she has to shut up and not take up Doctor's time. They glower intimidatingly over the desk, so the patient yammers and chokes and can't get out a sensible sentence.

Worse, the video shows how often doctors leap to conclusions and start writing out a prescription before the wretched patient is half-way through explaining what is wrong. And I'm told that teachers, too, are shown how they appear in front of a class, though I imagine most of them must instantly forget — or how could they be so insufferably proud of their classroom techniques.

All these, however, are public activities: a man's golf swing was always supposed to be a matter between him and his God, or at least between him and his caddie. If video can intrude on to the privacy of the tee, where else may it not go? Suppose, for example, that some follower of Masters and Johnson, some irritated wife took her husband along to such an installation to see for himself how he presses too hard or raises his head (or something) too fast in the marital bed?

Or suppose, which is perhaps more likely, that she didn't go quite that far, but thought that he should see what he looks like when haw-hawing at his own jokes, or cleaning out his ear with a finger, or reaching out not very accurately for the glass containing his eighth whisky?

At best, all the poor fellow could do would be to trap her into seeing herself scratching in a rude place, or vacuously smiling "yes, dear" with her mind in neutral; or manoeuvre a really rugged view of what she looks like in a pants suit — from behind. But it wouldn't do a lot for the marriage.

I am against all this. There are certain things it is better not to know. We have all experienced that jolt of wondering idly who is the bent hag tottering along the pavement — and then realizing it is oneself; we have all suffered the kind of friend who says "If you want my candid opinion . . ." and then tells you what the color of your new coat does for your skin. Why? I never wanted her candid opinion: I wanted to be told I look heavenly.

Actors, too, have profited from video — and what has it done for them? I bet that for every one who realized his rendering of Romeo made him look like Henry the VIII after a rough wife, for every Ophelia who decided to audition for Hamlet's mother instead, for every truly wooden actor who decided to opt for a career in cost accounting or soft furnishings instead, there are three who might have been some good — if they hadn't had their confidence completely dashed from the start.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell, the Edwardian actress, made her debut as a star in a play by George Bernard Shaw. At the end of the first act, she was making a complete mess of it, and everyone was muttering around trying to think of a way of telling her how terrible she was. Shaw simply went round to her dressing room, kissed both her hands and said "My dear . . . words fail me . . . you are superb." After which she came on acting like a dream, and became the foremost actress of her time.

See ourselves as others see us, indeed. Heaven forbid.

A number is just a number

By MALCOLM W. BROWNE

New York Times

A lot of people are afraid of numbers, so numbers make wonderful cudgels for winning arguments. Even meaningless numbers can be made to ring like fine crystal, shattering intellectual resistance with pure, unassailable truth.

There's a television commercial in which the huckster unabashedly tells viewers his product is better because it contains 850 milligrams of "pain reliever," while the competitor's products have only 650 milligrams. Some may ask, is the "pain reliever" in all these products the same? If not, does a comparison of the weights of different substances tell us anything about their abilities to relieve pain? In any case, is more "pain reliever" necessarily a good thing? (What if the "pain reliever" is morphine?)

But the "pain reliever" commercial drones on, evidently enriching its sponsors if not the cause of public enlightenment.

Numbers are also useful in factual reports and headlines, but they are easy to misuse, even with the best intentions. Typical of the genre is this sample: "Cosmic radiation from space threatens billions with genetic mutation." While the statement is true and the number realistic, a disaster that does not exist is implied.

More dangerous than the merely sloppy handling of numerical information are the disingenuous graphic illusions sometimes created by juggling numbers on graphs.

Tricky bar graphs, for instance, can fabricate illusions from honest numbers. In a group of competing breakfast cereals (or political candidates, or weapons systems, or whatever), any one of the contenders can usually be found to have some attribute by which it can be made to sound better than the others. But since all the competitors may possess the same attribute in nearly equal measure, it may be necessary to magnify the minuscule advantage of the product being touted.

One way to do this is with bar graphs showing how the selected attribute varies among the competitors. Even if all the bars are nearly the same height, small differences can be accentuated by enlarging the entire graph, lopping off the bottoms of all the bars and setting their severed tops on a new base line.

Chances are the average viewer, allergic to numbers, will overlook the fact that the base line is no longer zero, and will only see that the advertised product appears to stand head and shoulders above the rest of the field.

Such tricks are usually transparent to scientifically trained people, but even scientists are sometimes susceptible to the false conclusions and distortions that can arise from numbers. One of the most dangerous potential snares in science is also one of its most useful tools: statistical correlation.

Broadly speaking, there are two paths to scientific discovery. One is detailed examination of the chain of cause and effect that leads from one event to another. The other is comparison of the frequency of occurrence of two events, using mathematics to form an opinion as to whether the events are statistically related.

Some scientific questions have proved very difficult to unravel in terms of the mechanisms of cause and effect. Such questions include how atomic particles transform themselves, how the mind works and what causes cancer. Research in such fields must therefore lean heavily on the other tool, correlational analysis.

The trouble is that even a perfect statistical correlation between two kinds of event does not prove that one caused the other. Most patients found in obstetrical clinics are pregnant, but it does not necessarily follow that pregnancy is caused by exposure to obstetricians.

And yet, even sophisticated investigators are sometimes fooled by spurious statistical relationships caused by unnoticed extraneous effects. In a recent semi-serious experiment, one researcher implanted bits of plastic credit cards under the skin of rats, many of which later developed skin cancer. But, the administration's insistence on high interest rates notwithstanding, does credit really cause cancer?

The point is that numbers are not soothsayers. They are useful, but they are merely numbers.

New York

The stock market headed higher today, resuming its rally of earlier in the week.

Four of the 15 most active NYSE issues were utilities. Texas Utilities rose ⅜ to $19¼, Florida Power and Light ⅛ to $27⅛, Central and South West ¼ to $14¼, and Pacific Gas and Electric ⅝ to $23⅝.

Ten blocks of 100,000 shares or more of utility issues crossed the ticker tape in the first two hours, handled by such leading block-trading firms as Merrill Lynch, First Boston, Morgan Stanley and Salomon Brothers.

Analysts said one or more large investing institutions evidently optedto build up holdings of utilities in view of the recent decline ofinterest rates.

The utility group, which is sensitive to changing trends in rates because of its high yields, has been one of the strongest sectors of the market in recent weeks as rates have fallen from their peaks.

Among the gambling stocks, Caesars World rose 1⅝ to $15 and Bally Manufacturing climbed 2½ to $24¾. The issues were recommended by a investment adviser.

London

The Financial Times index was down 1.2 to 434.0.

Oils declined while golds firmed.

Canadian stocks were lower.

No-name brand popularity bad news to manufacturers

TORONTO (CP) — No-name products — the grocery revolution which struck supermarkets two years ago and the one which major brand name manufacturers hoped was a passing fad — are still a hit with consumers even though the big price savings are being trimmed away.

In February, 1979, generic products averaged 35 to 40 per cent cheaper than well-known brand names, but this year the gap has narrowed to between 29 and 34 per cent, a survey by Mathieu Williams Associates, a Toronto-based retail consulting firm, shows.

Most no-name or generic products are produced by the big brand-name manufacturers under contract with supermarket chains and those manufacturers are expected to want a better deal when the contracts expire says David Nichols, president of Loblaws Ltd. Ontario division.

There may be another reason. Bob McLelland, president of Operational Management Inc. of Toronto, says "generics have only spelled bad news for the manufacturers," and they may be trying to hold prices down on the brand name product lines in an effort to recapture some of the market.

Generics have made sizeable inroads. On some items, like apple juice, they now account for 70 per cent of the Ontario market. A growing number of manufacturers are grudgingly producing no-names to take up the slack on their production lines.

Currently generics account for between seven and 10 per cent of the total sales volume in areas other than meat, dairy and produce, and one survey predicts they will have 25 per cent of the market in five years.

Generics have found greater acceptance in Ontario than in other North American markets, partially because four supermarket chains control most of the market. At least one of those, Loblaws, has pushed no-names hard, backing them up with an extensive advertising campaign.

Loblaws has about 200 generic products and the other major chains have followed its lead to avoid being left out. Dominion Stores Ltd., the largest Ontario chain, follows with 180 generics and plans to add another 20 to 30 soon.

Dominion's vice-president of marketing, John Toma, says the company will continue to emphasize its house brands. "We want to give the consumer the benefit . . . with the widest assortment of national brands, private labels and generics."

Miracle Food Mart Ltd., a division of Steinberg Inc., has only 100 generics but the company is rapidly expanding its Valdi box stores. The stores offer a limited assortment of dry goods at discount prices.

Meanwhile Loblaws is adding more generics to its line-up, especially in health and beauty-aid departments and one report says it will soon introduce no-name non-prescription drugs and vitamins.

The company has also converted 10 of its older supermarkets into no-frills stores dealing primarily in generics and produce. Those box stores are earning the nickname baby-sharks because they are biting into the sales of other nearby supermarkets.

Generics have placed more power in the hands of the supermarket chains and food manufacturers are hopefully watching trends in the United States which suggest consumers are turning back to brand names.

One study by Foote Cone Belding Communications Ltd. of Chicago showed generic products may have reached a peak and are even losing some of the market. Quality is becoming as important as price.

But Ontario consumers, so far at least, seem happy with the quality of generics, and more than happy with the price.

Shell Canada

Shell Canada Ltd. has reported its net income for the first quarter rose to $89.2 million or 84 cents for each class A share from $46.1 million or 42 cents a share in the same period last year.

William Daniel, president and chief executive officer, said in a statement the outlook for 1980 is encouraging but shareholders should not expect the year-to-year improvement realized in the first quarter to be repeated.

Capital and exploration expenditures for the first quarter were $128 million, up 55 per cent over the first quarter of 1979. Expenditures for resource exploration and development accounted for all but $8 million of the total.

Reed Paper

Reed Paper Ltd. says it had first-quarter earnings to March 29 of $8.3 million on sales of $51.3 million.

An extraordinary income tax reduction of $2.7 million brought profits up to $11.0 million or 53 cents per share, up from $6.2 million or 28 cents in the same period last year.

D.A. MacIver, Reed president and chief executive officer, said the improvement was due to "buoyant markets and a significant increase in net interest income."

Reed directors declared a quarterly dividend of 25 cents per A and B preferred share, payable on July 1 to shareholders as of June 6.

Mineral hunt stepped up

VANCOUVER (CP) — Spending on mining exploration in B.C. and the Yukon will increase this year for the first time since 1972, a spokesman for the B.C. and Yukon Chamber of Mines said Wednesday.

The forecast of $125 million in expenditures for 1980 is 20 per cent higher than in 1972 with inflation taken into account, chamber manager Rick Higgs said in a news release.

"The increase in activity also is reflected in a nearly 100-per-cent increase to 16,189 in the number of claim units recorded in the first quarter of 1980 over the same period a year ago," he said.

Higgs said a survey of intended exporation spending shows that $70.5 million will be spent on hardrock exploration in B.C. and $22.5 million on coal for a total of $93 million, up 54.5 per cent from 1979.

In Yukon Territory, hardrock exploration spending will reach $29.2 million and coal exploration $3.6 million, up 20.1 per cent from 1979.

Higgs said the level of exploration activity in Yukon Territory in 1980 will be four times that recorded in 1972 after inflation is taken into account.

"This reflects a continuation of the trend commenced in the mid-1970s to substantial new exploration in Canada's north," he said.

"However, virtually all exploration spending in the Yukon Territory will be done by large firms, with several big-budget property programs leading the way this year. In B.C., on the other hand, junior companies account for a much larger share of total spending."

He said the increase in exploration is attributed to general increases in demand for metals, better prices and previous industry success in finding and developing new mines.

Long-term salmon market outlook in the pink

By MIKE HUGHES

Although this year's salmon fishery is clouded with dour reports of skimpy stocks and poor markets, the federal fisheries department sees sunny times ahead.

In a marketing study completed late last year, the department says the export market for B.C. salmon is going to open up dramatically.

Specifically, the forecast is for the sale of frozen fish to Japan to triple what it was in 1978 by the year 1985.

That market will almost double next year with sales jumping to 17,144 tonnes, compared to 9,377 tonnes in 1978, and then to 27,500 by 1985.

The basis for this assumption, the report says, is that the extension of jurisdictions has reduced Japan's high seas salmon catch.

Prior to 1977, Japan harvested salmon on the high seas bound for North American and Russian waters. But that year, the Japanese fishermen were excluded from the water's of Russia's 200-mile extended zone.

Before 1977, Japan's salmon catch on the high seas was reported to be as high as 75 thousand tonnes. This has been reduced to 42,500 tonnes and may be phased out completely in future years, the report says.

"The result of the change in landings has been to alter Japan's status from a substantial exporter of salmon to a large importer."

The fisheries report predicts that Japan's high seas salmon fishery will be phased out completely and that the country will maintain a domestic fishery of only 90 thousand tonnes.

Consumption of salmon in Japan will increase to the 1975 level of 200 thousand tonnes, resulting in an import requirement of 110 thousand tonnes, the report says.

The report, titled Annex to the Worldwide Fisheries Marketing Study: Prospects to 1985, was produced last October.

A foreward to the main report cautions that the information was collected between March and June, 1979 and may be dated given the speed with which market conditions are changing.

"Notwithstanding, the findings contained in these reports represent an important consolidation of knowledge regarding market potential and implications for improvements in our existing marketing and production practices."

The findings should be used by both government and industry to capitalize on the market opportunities, the report says.

Jerry Spitz, president of the Fisheries Association of B.C., said the report generally is very good but has to be viewed cautiously because of the many assumptions it makes.

For example, he said, the report presumes the Japanese market will be healthy but right now it is flat.

The country began buying a lot of salmon once the boundary extensions were imposed and has a large inventory to sell before needing any more.

Reports say there is as much as 78,000 pounds of last year's frozen salmon still on the shelves of Japanese grocery stores.

Spitz says he doesn't buy the report's prediction that Japan's high seas salmon fishery will drop off completely.

He also describes as "iffy" the fisheries prediction that Canada's proportion of Japan's import requirement will expand to 25 per cent in the future from a 1978 level of 14 per cent.

The forecast is based on so many assumptions that it has to be questioned, Spitz says.

"Who knows what Bristol Bay is going to produce, for example?"

Alaskan fishermen are expected to net more fish this year from the bay in northwestern Alaska than they have since the last century.

Another question mark is the supply of salmon available to B.C. fishermen. Stocks are getting lower and until the salmonid enhancement program really begins to show some results, catches could suffer.

Asked what if anything B.C. producers can do to ensure they cash in on the predicted Japanese market, Spitz says the answer is for the companies to continue to supply the best quality frozen fish to the country.

He said B.C. has the reputation for being the number one quality exporter to that country.

A little more promotion would help as well, he said, adding that a group formed two years ago called the B.C. Seafood Exporters Association is going to take a hard look at ways of improving the export market.

Association manager Shun Ishiguro says the group represents 22 industry organizations and will be looking at ways to develop a better information system and provide more market research.

Ned Easton, president of Oakland Fisheries Ltd. of Victoria, said it would be wrong to focus on improving one market alone.

The reason for many of the problems the industry is facing today is that companies haven't taken a broad enough approach to their marketing, Easton said.

"We have a lot of work to do in order to stay competitive in all the markets."

Easton said the marketing of fish is changing now with the emphasis more on selling a fancier finished product rather than just exporting the whole fish.

The fisheries report also says that aside from the predicted jump in the Japan import market, there is a general over-all increase in demand for salmon products on a world-wide scale.

"The increase in world demand for salmon has been associated with rapidly rising disposable incomes in the major consuming countries and exchange rates vis-a-vis the U.S. and Canadian dollar."

The report is also optimistic that the downward trend in B.C. salmon stocks is over and should be reversed with the aid of the enhancement program.

The over-all effect of enhancement programs by the major salmon producing countries is precarious to predict, the report says.

"The actual success that each country will experience in attaining its production goals is a major variable.

"Further uncertainties are associated with declines in natural (non-enhanced) production because of continuing encroachment by alternative uses of estuaries (such as power), urbanization and industrialization.

"It is safe to conclude, however, that the decline in world salmon production has been halted and an increasing trend has been established."

Flu bug adjourns trial

A second juror took sick Wednesday causing the second adjournment in a week in the trial of 23 men accused of importing 33.5 tons of marijuana near Tofino last year.

Crown counsel Gordon Macdonald reported the illness, a case of influenza, as court was scheduled to resume after a two-day delay caused by one of the defence lawyers having to be in the B.C. Court of Appeal in Vancouver.

Judge Montague Drake said unless there is a serious illness he was not going to reduce the jury and he adjourned the trial until Monday at 10 a.m.

The Criminal Code allows a jury to be reduced from the original 12 but only down to 10.

B.C. may drop heroin program

The provincial government, after spending millions of dollars implementing a compulsory Heroin Treatment Act and fighting the courts for jurisdicition to enforce it, may not want the controversial program after all, says Health Minister Rafe Mair.

The government's decision last October to appeal a B.C. Supreme Court ruling that the act — backed strongly by former health minister Bob McClelland — is an infringement of federal jurisdiction, has placed Mair, who assumed the portfolio in November, in an unenviable position.

Mair, who indicated in February after a visit to the Brannen Lake treatment centre near Nanaimo that his feeling towards compulsory treatment had swung from "slightly in favor to slightly against," says the government will have to take a second look at the program — much of which has been phased out.

"If you assume that the government wins the appeal in the final analysis the government would have to re-evaluate the program and make a decision again," Mair said in an interview.

Chances are good the government could win its appeal considering the fact that last week, before reserving decision on the question, the B.C. Court of Appeal indicated it is prepared to seriously consider compulsory heroin treatment as a necessary health measure.

Mr. Justice M.M. McFarlane, head of the judicial panel, said heroin addiction in B.C. is a destructive force which, in the absence of federal legislation, may require provincial intervention on a health level.

If the appeal is won, Ron Stern, lawyer for former drug addict Brenda Schneider who challenged the constitutionality of the act, could go to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Dennis Cocke (NDP—New Westminster) said Mair has been put in a tough position because of the fact that so much money has spent to date.

"I'd say between $8 million and $12 million has been poured down the drain and it'll stay down the drain because it's an unworkable situation," he said.

Cocke said the difficulty the health ministry finds itself in now proves the NDP was correct from the outset when it said the program would run into all kinds of opposition and an awful lot of trouble.

John Russell, the Alcohol and Drug Commission commissioner responsible for the heroin treatment program, said $4 million was spent on the program to last September before the Act was ruled unconsitutional.

He said that while the Brannen Lake centre and other treatment centres in the province are still accepting voluntary patients — about 350 drug addicts currently are receving services under the Alcohol and Drug Commission Act — most of the provisions of the Heroin Treatment Act, including the review panels set up to screen propsective patients, have been dismantled.

Mair said dismantled is too strong a term, but admits: "We're not involved in the program right now.

"And a number of the people that were in the program are either no longer with us or are performing other tasks," he said.

SPCA okays animal shelter at Mill Bay

The B.C. Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has given the Good Shepherd Animal Shelter at Mill Bay a clean bill of health but has recommended several improvements.

Al Hickey, executive director of the society, said today an appraisal carried out recently under the direction of Victoria veterinarian Dr. J.S. Down concluded the animals are receiving adequate care.

But Hickey said there is still room for improvement.

He said that at a meeting Sunday with the shelter's board of directors a team of four SPCA representatives made several recommendations.

They included preventing overcrowding, upgrading employee training, installing a proper euthanasian area, re-organizing hospital facilities to provide isolation of animals, and improving facilities in line with modern kennel practices.

Hickey said the society would like to see the shelter limit the number of animals it accepts but could not give a figure for an optimum capacity.

Western SCs seek split from Quebec

OTTAWA (CP) — Many western Canadian members of the Social Credit party want to separate from the party's Quebec branch, says Bruce Arnold, national president.

During a telephone interview Wednesday from Wasaga Beach, Ont., Arnold described the western Canadian proposal as "our own version of sovereignty-association." While the westerners and Quebecers would be autonomous, they would maintain an association.

The western Canadians want "to have their membership cards in English only," Arnold said.

The idea is to be discussed this weekend at a party executive meeting in Ottawa. A decision on splitting the party into regional parties would not be taken until a national convention this fall.

Arnold said he personally is opposed to the idea and that only a minority of Quebecers favor the proposal. The majority of the party membership is in Quebec.

"However, some Quebecers feel they would do better in an election campaign if they did not have to worry about the effect of speeches in Alberta."

For example, many Quebec members are supporting sovereignty-association in the May 20 referendum. Many English-speaking members of the party oppose creation of a sovereign Quebec.

Roy told reporters in Montreal Tuesday that he is seriously thinking of resigning.

'Yankee go home' stymies PO

CALGARY (CP) — A retired Calgary accountant took the heat off the post office Wednesday when he admitted stamping "Yankee go home" on a letter that was returned to an Arizona realtor.

"Whenever I get mail from the Yankees, I stamp it and send it back," said John Barnes, 64, whose lodging house in southwest Calgary also sports a sign with the same message as his stamp.

"I just don't like Yankees," he said. "I resent the fact that everything we do is 99-per-cent Yankee. And I don't care what the post office says. I'll keep stamping the mail and sending it back."

A post office investigation was started last week after Roland Brescia, a Phoenix, Ariz., real estate agent, complained that a letter he sent to a Calgary address was stamped "Yankee go home" before being returned to him.

Also written on the envelope by hand was "garbage mail, return to sender."

"It is a relief to find that it didn't happen within the post office," said Bob Fletcher, public affairs officer for the post office in Calgary.

However, postal officials now must contend with the fact Barnes intends to continue his anti-American practice which he says he started two years ago.

Joe Nolan, a postal inspector, said there is a clause under prohibited mailing regulations that forbids writing anything on an envelope except the name and address. But there is no way to enforce the regulation except to return the letter to the sender, which is already being done in these cases.

"We'll certainly tell this fellow to stop doing it, but there isn't too much we can do if he refuses," said Nolan.

Another envelope bearing Barnes's trademark turned up in a letter-carrier depot Wednesday marked for return to another U.S. mailer.

"I guess we'll just have to go ahead and send it back," said Nolan. "We really don't have a choice."

CRD vows Tillicum legal fight

Couvelier argued Wednesday the proposed regional bylaw discriminates against Saanich.

"What you are doing is making a particular limitation to apply only to Saanich," he said.

"On that basis, I feel I am released with the passage of this from any obligation I may have given this board."

Campbell said the bylaw which restricts regional shopping centres to 295,000 square feet, unless they get CRD approval, applies to all new shopping centres in the regional district.

Couvelier disagreed, saying as far as he was concerned other complexes, such as the Jacklin Road centre, would not be affected.

In an attempt to placate Couvelier, Langford director Ed Lubick said he was prepared to have the proposed Langford centre come under the same restrictions.

A reformed smoker, he was a prime mover behind the smoking ban.

"We've got a tiger by the tail here at the moment."

He said some non-smokers have turned militant, referring to the recently-publicized dangers of breathing secondhand smoke, apparently as dangerous to your health as puffing on a cancer stick yourself.

The ministry tried to accommodate smokers by moving desks around, but the open plan-style offices on each floor mean smoke soon spreads around, even though the air conditioning system was beefed up.

The more flexible smokers who in the early stages went along with the ban on smoking at one's desk now see other smokers lighting up at their work places and are demanding the same rights.

"It's an absolute (expletive deleted)," said one amused smoker, who has until now kept the rules. "A total failure."

Smoking was allowed in lunch rooms on each floor and a third of the 1,000-seat cafeteria was set aside for smokers. Some 60 per cent of the 800 health ministry employees in the building are non-smokers, about the same proportion as in the national population.

Those who couldn't wait the 1½ hours between breaks without a butt were allowed to take their work to a smoking area, although that privilege was abused somewhat, said Bainbridge.

The controversy over Tillicum shopping centre has again reinforced the public perception of Saanich council as a group of wild and crazy people. Does Saanich do anything without outraging at least half the municipality? You can't recognize the aldermen without a program.

Voting records? Forget them. If nay votes were black and yea votes were white, half of Saanich council, including El Supremo, Mayor Mel Couvelier; would look like zebras.

Saanich council has ding-donged back and forth so often on crucial issues who knows what they really think? It's a municipal council that with every meeting looks more like Abbott and Costello's famous Who's on First? routine.

Royal Oak industrial park, Minnie Mountain, Tillicum shopping centre — you name the issue and Saanich council has done a flip flop.

If consistency is the hobgoblin of small minds, then Saanich taxpayers have an incredible concentration of brainpower in their municipal hall.

Try to follow the Tillicum controversy. Please. Some of the history is interesting, especially a newspaper account of a Capital Regional District emergency board meeting last Aug. 27. The CRD made a special concession at that meeting, allowing Tillicum to contravene the regional plan by 100,000 square feet if the municipality agreed to hold the line at 295,000 square feet and keep all other shopping centres to the CRD's 195,000-foot limit.

Some CRD directors were skeptical of Saanich's promise, but Charlie Perkins of Sooke was reassuring:

"It is unduly belaboring a minor concern and attributing to Saanich a duplicity which is not warranted. We have no reason to believe they would pass a resolution of this kind with their fingers crossed and an escape clause. That is unthinkable and in any case would be ineffective."

* * *

Ahem. As Shakespeare said, what's past is prologue. Fast forward to Monday a week ago. Saanich council voted 5-4 to lift the restrictive covenant limiting the size of Tillicum, astounding Charlie Perkins and everyone else.

Couvelier has been too clever by half, first saying he opposed the expansion. That pretence quickly collapsed. He was in the four-vote minority which opposed Tillicum's expansion, but two days later at a CRD committee meeting he defended the majority's decision and was the only director to oppose legal action by the board to force Saanich to keep its word.

If he really wanted Tillicum held to 295,000 square feet, why didn't he make it unanimous?

This week Saanich council came to a screeching halt, freezing the earlier decision until staff can prepare reports on its impact.

Except for Couvelier, of course. He was in a minority of four again, but this time his friends were Geoff Vantreight, Mary Casilio and Ed Lum, all of whom voted last week to expand Tillicum and to hell with the regional plan.

Then he blew up and stalked out of the CRD meeting on Wednesday when the district insisted on holding Saanich to its promise of last August, telling his brother directors to take regionalism "and stick it in your ear."

Naive CRD; it thought a mayor's word was good enough. At least next time they'll have the Hamlet of Saanich on the tape recording system, ironically installed at his own request earlier this year in a fuss with the press over whether he actually used a derogatory word insulting to blacks.

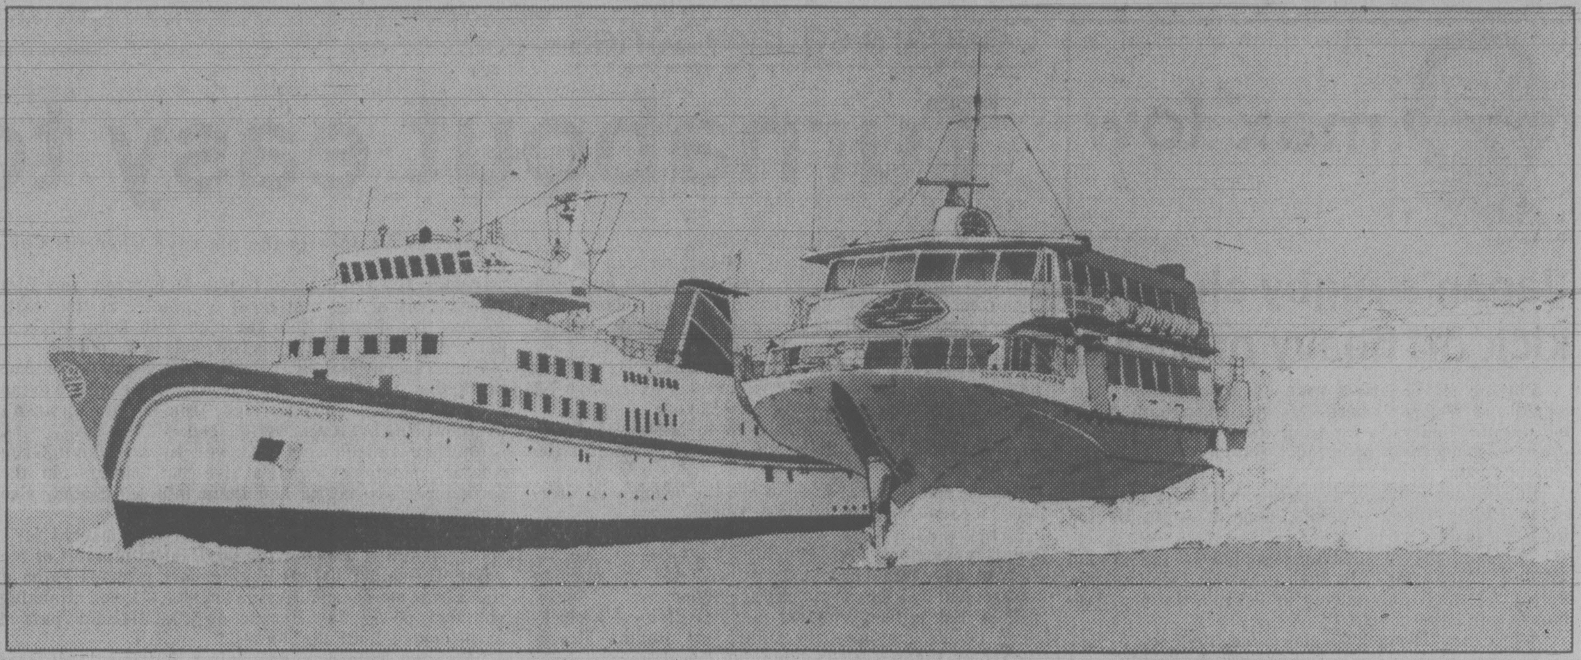
How's the erratic mayor going to vote next time? Stay tuned for more great entertainment. Never a predictable moment with Mayor Mel Couvelier at the helm.

A postscript: the cynic in the Tillicum furore has to be Ald. Irene Block, the saviour of the Blenkinsop Valley and the green, green fields of Royal Oak. She was one of the prime movers behind the council revolt on Tillicum.

If the larger Tillicum (bigger than Mayfair and Town and Country together) goes ahead then Broadmead centre at Royal Oak — where Block got lots of votes last time — won't be approved.

That's her reasoning. I guess it's the logical outcome of the neighborhood supremacy doctrine of several Saanich aldermen.

Local neighborhoods should have complete veto power over new developments is the basic belief. Irene Block is sticking up for her constituency. People in the area of Tillicum shopping centre may not want the monster new development? Too bad, you can move somewhere else. But not the Blenkinsop Valley, please.



Victoria Princess and Flying Princess . . . under the Union Jack, a British-style pub

Demoted ferry to cost more

The Queen of Prince Rupert has been demoted in regal rankings and will be known as the Victoria Princess when she goes on the Victoria-Seattle run May 16.

She is also being given a new coat of paint, a funnel with a Union Jack motif and recliner seats for its limit of 850 passengers.

She is replacing the Princess Marguerite, which could carry 1,800.

While seating is reduced, fares have been increased 15 per cent. The trip on the Marguerite was $13 and $21 for a return ticket.

The new rate on the Victoria Princess is $15 and $25 return. All prices are in U.S. funds. B.C. senior citizens and children five to 11 will pay $8, $13 return. Children under five ride free.

The Victoria Princess will have a British-style pub, a licenced dining room, cafeteria, gift shop, duty-free store and, possibly, first-run movies.

In fact, she has everything but a schedule which will be announced soon.

It is expected she will make one round-trip daily in spring and fall with two trips in summer. The second sailing would arrive in Victoria in the evening.

The Victoria Princess, operated by the provincial government through its B.C. Steamship Co., will take four-and-a-half hours to complete the voyage in each direction.

Meanwhile, the Flying Princess jetfoil, which is also being painted with the Union Jack theme, will be run as a Victoria community venture, also starting May 16.

She carries 250 passengers and makes the trip to Seattle in two hours.

The jetfoil will offer snacks and light refreshments.

Fares will be $25 one way, $40 return, in U.S. funds. Children two to 11 and B.C. senior citizens will pay $15 and $24 return. Children under two are free.

Bob Wright, a director of BCSC, and Pat Crofton, president of the Flying Princess Transportation Co., jointly announced a co-operative rate will be offered on the two vessels, allowing passengers to travel jetfoil one way and by ferry in the other direction.

The fly-cruise rate in U.S. funds is $35 round trip for adults, $21 for children two to 11 and for B.C. senior citizens, and free for children under two.

The jetfoil's schedule has not yet been set.

Beach patrols organized by Saanich

Special police beach patrols will start next week in an effort to control wild teenagers' beach parties.

The decision was reached after a three-hour meeting Wednesday between residents, police officials and aldermen.

Saanich will also be asked to approve a special overtime fund of $30,000 to put extra men on certain patrols that involve restoring order to beach and house parties.

Other suggestions included expanding the reserve police force, asking neighboring police departments to help in crisis situations and as a last resort — dog patrols and a specially-trained riot squad.

Mayor Mel Couvelier, chairman of the police board, said at the meeting he is reluctant to restore spot beach patrols.

Police policy of not having full patrols on weekends is bad management, Couvelier told the Times Wednesday.

He said he wants to be satisfied police are doing the best job using existing manpower before approving additional funds.

But Insp. Ted Owen said there weren't enough officers on duty to handle the problem and that officers feared for their safety because of verbal abuse and beer bottles hurled at them.

Ask the Times

Q. Could you please provide me with the address of the British Medical Association? M.V.G.

A. British Medical Association House, Tavistock Square, London, W.C.1, Britain.

Q. Do you have an up-to-date census of the population of each of the municipalities making up Greater Victoria, that is, Victoria, Oak Bay, Esquimalt and Saanich? E.L.G.

A. Victoria, Oak Bay and Esquimalt only have figures dating from the 1976 census. They are: Victoria, 62,551; Oak Bay, 17,658, and Esquimalt, 15,053. Saanich estimates its population to be 78,500. The 1976 figure was 73,383.

A University of Victoria biologist believes he's on the brink of a major medical breakthrough in the treatment of broken bones.

Dr. Arthur Fontaine says the process involves use of the skeletons of sea urchins and starfish as a way of rebuilding human bones.

Fontaine is convinced surgeons can repair bad fractures more effectively by using material from the skeletons of animals.

"Initial tests have been highly successful," he said.

Fontaine said the bones of humans and other animals are a mixture of stony material and flexible inorganic tissue while the skeletons of starfish and sea urchins are composed entirely of limestone.

The limestone provides two advantages, he said.

The material is native to the body and not likely to cause immune reactions and can be cleaned and sterilized to eliminate other foreign matter.

And it is soluble so that it can be eliminated after it has done its work as a scaffolding for new bone.

Fontaine said the skeleton is perforated by millions of tiny holes which form a twisting network occupying about half its volume.

He said he and research assistant Bev Hall have found that this network is an ideal home for human fibroblasts, cells that secrete a connective material that is the first step in bone building.

Other cells, building on the foundation laid down by the fibroblasts, add other components and clean away foreign material such as, in the case of a fracture, bits of old, broken bone.

Fontaine said he is confident the later stages will follow and the starfish or sea urchin bone will be removed naturally when it is no longer needed.

However, to prove this, he wants to begin experiments in live animals.

He said the idea was discovered by scientists in California who concluded the skeletons would be too weak and too soluble to use as a bone replacement.

Fontaine said the California researchers then took a different approach to the problem but without great success.

"Our approach was the simplest possible. They said it is too soft, too soluble. We think these are its virtues. It should be regarded as a biodegradable ceramic."

To carry out a practical bone reconstruction, he said, a surgeon would simply pack the skeleton material into a temporary steel framework and wait for the bone tissue to grow into it.

Fontaine said a series of experiments on rats is planned to see how well the material is accepted by the body as well as how the bone regrows.

Two-hour walkout by CUPE members

By MIKE HUGHES

Greater Victoria school district maintenance workers were off the job for about two hours this morning to draw attention to what they say are unfair labor practices by district management.

The 50 members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 382, went back to work at 10 a.m. after being advised to do so by their president Bob Cunningham.

The workers stood around outside the maintenance yard on Cecilia Road, some carrying signs reading Unfair Labor Practice.

Cunningham said the walkout took place because the employees have been frustrated in their efforts to get a meeting with John Young, chairman of the school trustees' personnel committee over alleged violations of the contract.

The specific case involves a stock clerk, a member of CUPE Local 947, which represents the school district inside employees, being told by management to operate a fork lift.

That work belongs to Local 382, Cunningham said, adding that Local 947 agrees but management insists the man operate the fork lift.

"That is just the tip of the iceberg," Cunningham said, listing a number of examples of alleged contract violations.

Spokesmen for the school district had no comment on the situation.

Cunningham blames district secretary-treasurer Carl Warner for much of the labor-management friction.

"He continually and knowingly violates the contract to see how far we'll go," he said.

"We just let him know that we are going to push it all the way."

Cunningham said in the last 18 months there have been 15 grievances or arbitrations and the union has won all but one.

Officials at Willows elementary school where Cunningham works as a custodian refused to allow him to leave his job this morning and go down to the maintenance yard.

However, he went anyway to advise the employees to return to work.

Cigarette blamed in fatal fire

Victoria fire investigators have determined careless smoking and not a malfunctioning instant-on television set caused Monday night's fire at a James Bay home that claimed two lives.

Deputy fire chief Whitey Severson said the fire started in a chesterfield and was undoubtedly started by a cigarette.

Preliminary reports indicated the source might have been an instant-on television set.

David Murdoch, 59, and Lorraine LePoidevin, 58, died in the blaze which broke out at 11:30 p.m. at 57 South Turner.

Retiring Victoria Press manager feted by staff

John Carrick (Jack) Melville, 65, who retires as general manager of Victoria Press at the end of April, was honored Wednesday night by 400 employees, retired employees and their spouses at a reception in Holyrood House.

Separate gifts were presented by each department in the plant.

Melville was given an extended ovation after saying he had always regarded Vic Press employees as "part of the family."

Melville has been with the firm for 32 years and developed a reputation for fairness, even when handling difficult wage negotiations.

Upon retirement he will relax in the garden for a while before taking an extended vacation in the United Kingdom.

Melville was born in Kelowna of Scottish ancestry in 1915 and his family moved to Victoria when he was six.

Joining the Uplands Golf Club when he was 11, he became an outstanding amateur golfer.

After graduation from Oak Bay High School, where he was senior prefect (student president) and a rugby player, he was articled as a chartered accountant to the firm of W.B. Monteith. He joined the RCNVR as a probationary sub-lieutanant, serving on the east coast.

He joined The Daily Colonist in 1948 as a company accountant. When the Colonist and Victoria Times formed Victoria Press in 1951 he became financial controller.

He was soon promoted to business manager and in 1964 to general manager.

Melville was active in the community. He was on the board of the Community Chest for 10 years, treasurer of the Victoria Symphony Society for two years and a member of the Downtown Kiwanis Club. He was also active in the Chamber of Commerce at the local and provincial levels.

Japan's rugby champs kick off heavy program

Playing on Victoria's wide open parks like Macdonald and Windsor where kids and dogs roam freely and the atmosphere is far from formal might be a bit of a comedown for Nippon Steel, the club rugby champions of Japan.

But the honorable hosts, in the shape of Vancouver Island Rugby Union officials, hope it won't be too much of a shock.

"We hope they won't be disappointed," says Union scheduler Al Foster. "In their national final against Meiji University, they played in Tokyo's National Stadium before 70,000 people.

"Here they'll be lucky to play before 70!"

Though the warmer weather and the urge to get out and do something rather than watch certainly detracts from crowds at this time of year, there should be a few more than 70 fans there when Nippon Steel takes on Island champion James Bay Athletic Association at 3 p.m. Saturday at Macdonald Park. A Nippon second team will play Agrarians in a preliminary match at 1:30.

The Japanese champions will wind up their Island visit next Wednesday with two games (5 p.m. and 6:30) against Oak Bay Club teams at Windsor Park.

It looks like the Island will be simply swarming with Japanese rugby players this weekend as on Sunday, Wak-Wak teams will play over-40 exhibition games against Victoria's Ebb Tide and the Nanaimo Pioneers. They're at UVic's Centennial Stadium, kicking off at 2 p.m.

* * *

And, though that already might seem like a lot, it's not the only rugby that's on this weekend, either.

Two of the three James Bay Athletic Association teams that have a chance of winning provincial club titles will be in action Saturday in championship semi-finals. At noon at Windsor Park, James Bay plays Surrey Beavers in a third-division semi and in a second-division tussle at 1:30, also at Windsor, James Bay plays Pocomos.

Kelowna is playing Vancouver in the other second-division semi-final while in the third division, Vancouver will meet the winner of the James Bay-Pocomos game.

Surrey Beavers are playing Vancouver Rowing Club in the first-division semi this weekend in Vancouver and the winner of that one goes through to meet James Bay in the final.

All three division finals will be played in Victoria on Saturday, May 3, at UVic in conjunction with the B.C. High School Rugby Championship which is being staged at the university next Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The B.C. high school final will be played as a preliminary game to the provincial first-division championship final.

* * *

The Japanese teams' visits are part of what looks like a United Nations of rugby in Victoria over the next two or three weeks. In that time, there will be appearances by not only Japanese squads but by teams from Australia, England, Scotland and Wales!

Glen Innes, a club that sounds more Scottish but, in fact, comes from Down Under, will play Cowichan Rugby Club in Duncan May 14 and Castaways in Victoria May 17.

The English glamour touring side Anti-Assassins, which was last here in 1973, will play Valhallians, an ex-UVic team, on May 15 and tackle James Bay on Saturday, May 17. Both Island sides will find their hands full as Anti-Assassins contain only two players who aren't county level or above — and they include six full internationals!

* * *

Stewarts Melville, one of Scotland's top club sides, will play James Bay here on May 29 but the big fan interest, undoubtedly, will centre on the Wales versus British Columbia game at Royal Athletic Park on May 20. Wales meets Canada in a Test match in Vancouver on Saturday, May 24.

So there you have it. There's a lot of rugby coming up in a short space of time. Quite a bit to choose from this Saturday, too. But for my money it looks like the Japanese team's games at Macdonald Park might be the most entertaining.

Hufnagel picks Riders over Lions

REGINA (CP) — John Hufnagel, the quarterback who played out his option with Calgary Stampeders, has chosen Saskatchewan Roughriders as his new Canadian Football League team.

Hufnagel said in a telephone interview Wednesday that he has agreed to sign with the Roughriders, after considering earlier offers from British Columbia Lions and Hamilton Tiger-Cats.

It is reported that Hufnagel, who played with the Stampeders for five seasons, will sign a three-year contract.

Cougars square series

Third game here tonight

Turnabout easy to explain

By ERNIE FEDORUK

According to the scientists, everything can be explained. Ghosts are still harder to figure out than junior hockey and you don't have to hold a doctorate in understanding to explain Victoria Cougars' turnabout in the Western Hockey League's championship series.

Beaten 6-4 by Regina Pats on Tuesday, the Cougars rebounded impressively Wednesday to triumph 7-2 and deadlock the best-of-seven series at one.

The third game will be played in Memorial Arena tonight and the series then will shift to Regina for the next three.

Just as the series is tied, so are the coaches in offering just cause for the Victoria rebound.

"They played very well," said Brian Murray, Regina's rookie pilot.

"We played much, much better," was the opening assessment by Victoria coach Jack Shupe.

Both also agreed Victoria players effectively blockaded centre ice lanes to nullify the Regina attacking tactics that proved so damaging Tuesday.

There were other reasons.

There was a notable difference in goaltending. Regina's Bart Hunter started out Wednesday in the manner he finished Tuesday, then lost his touch, not dramatically but enough to mount up the reasons for the difference. Victoria's Grant Fuhr, offered better protection than Kevin Eastman was given the night before, came up with the big save when the Cougars need it.

Hunter thwarted both Torrie Robertson and Bob Jansch, within the matter of a minute, at the start. Regina then jumped into the lead with Doug Wickenheiser scoring the first of his two goals in the period.

When Jansch got Cougars on the scoreboard at the 12:32 mark, that signified Hunter's drop from the superb to the average drawer. Jansch's shot, from an angle, wasn't overpowering but it was well-placed.

Another Jansch shot followed by one from Greg Adams, capping Victoria's five-goal outburst in the second period that pushed them into a 6-2 lead, also were in the suspect category.

Fuhr, without much chance on either of Wickenheiser's shots, slammed the door for the final 45 minutes of the game. The slam that hurt Regina most, perhaps, came at the start of the second. Regina leading, 2-1, and attacking with their power play. Pats set up Mike Blaisdell, parked at the crease, but Fuhr blocked it.

"My guys kind of sagged after that one," admitted Murray.

Victoria's defence, reduced to four after Robert Jacobson was ejected with a game misconduct in the second period, also turned about despite some first-period signs of nervousness. They shook off the early stuttering, and came back to give Cougars better service.

Victoria's most glaring giveaways numbered 10, seven by the defence. Four of the defencemen's mistakes came in the first period. For the last two, however, they drew only three minus marks.

Victoria's turnaround also gained momentum with Cougars' more constructive attacking, particularly by Brad Palmer. The 18-year-old joined Jansch as a two-goal gunner, managed an assist and also sparkled in penalty-killing assignments, of which there were many.

And in a series which is supposed to test Victoria's penalty killing against Regina's potent power play, Barry Pederson also provided great spark, figuring in four goals and joining Jansch, Palmer, Robertson and Bob Smith in muzzling the Pats. Regina managed only one power-play goal in nine tries.

Misconducts accounted for 110 minutes and four players — Jacobson (34 minutes) and rookie Bob McGill (19) of Victoria and Regina's Barry Zeigler (27), Bud Langstrom (31) and Glen Sorenson (27) — were the most abrasive.

Finally, among the reasons for Victoria's rebound, was this one by Shupe:

"Our conditioning won it."

Oak Bay trips Mt. Doug

By MAX LOW

It was a lot closer than the score might suggest and a little closer than coach Gary Johnston might have liked but Oak Bay Barbarians defeated Mt. Doug Mountainmen 22-12 before about 600 youthful yelling fans at Royal Athletic Park Wednesday night to win the Howard Russell Cup.

The victory capped an unbeaten season for Oak Bay in the Greater Victoria High School Rugby League and gave the Barbarians the playoff trophy for the first time in six years.

If the Mountainmen, who started very much the underdogs, had pulled off the upset of the season it would have been the first time Mt. Doug had won the cup since 1968 when the school's present coach John Howe was fullback on the champion team.

But Wednesday night was no time for "ifs" and "would haves." It was a time for action and, though Mt. Doug tried desperately hard till the bitter end and did a good job of holding their formidable opponents out for a long time, Oak Bay provided most of that action.

"This is great stuff!" he screamed from the bench after one fine penetrating run by the Oak Bay three-quarters. "This is great stuff! Look at the boys! This is what it's all about!"

A penalty goal booted by Mt. Doug fullback Colin Ayers had given the Mountainmen a lead after only five minutes but it wasn't long before Oak Bay evened things up with a long penalty kick by its fullback Mark Wyatt.

Inside-centre Mike Humphreys split the tie with an electrifying 50-yard run in which he broke out of three tackles and dived over for a try. Wyatt, giving a superb display of power kicking, converted that one and sent over two more long penalty goals to give Oak Bay a 15-3 lead at half time.

It started to look at that stage as though it might turn into a rout but Mt. Doug had other ideas, bouncing back admirably with three more penalty goals kicked by fullback Ayers to narrow the score to 15-12.

Realizing even an unconverted try would give them victory, the Mountainmen threw everything they had into it and for quite some time they had their more talented opponents scampering around the field, the Oak Bay fans on the edges of their seats and Gary Johnston doing a little dance on the sideline.

It took an incredible 45-yard penalty goal by Wyatt five minutes from the end to turn back the Mt. Doug onslaught.

That made it 18-12, took the heat off and seemed to take a lot of the oomph out of the Mountainmen and just near the end Oak Bay's Paul Russell nipped around the scrum and crashed over for a try.

In a preliminary game, Belmont took over in the last 10 minutes to break a 6-6 tie and romp to a 20-6 win over Esquimalt and capture the Lt. Col Hodgkins Trophy.

Esquimalt, which is coached by Keith Morrison and won the consolation final last year, got a try from Robbie Klee (which Tom Woods converted) and held Belmont to a 6-6 tie at half time.

It was still tied until 10 minutes from the end when the harder-running Belmont players were able to cash in on a couple of Esquimalt mistakes and turn them into tries.

Flyhalf Alan Naylor scored one try and kicked two conversions for Belmont, which is coached by Graham Hunter, and the other tries came from Rob Alexander, James Manning and Karl Klashinsky.

Sonic rally falls short

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 31 points and collected 16 rebounds Wednesday night at Los Angeles to power the Lakers to a 108-99 victory over Seattle SuperSonics, evening their National Basketball Association West Division final series at one game each.

Lakers guards Earvin (Magic) Johnson and Norm Nixon had 19 points each for the Lakers, and Jamaal Wilkes added 16.

Gus Williams was Seattle's leading scorer with 24 points, Dennis Johnson chipped in 20 and Lonnie Shelton added 15. Fred Brown, the Sonics' reserve guard who had scored 34 points in Seattle's 108-107 victory Tuesday night, had 14.

Seattle, the defending NBA champion, was behind by 11 points at the start of the final quarter, but cut the Lakers' margin to just three, 95-92, with 3:53 remaining. However, the Lakers pulled away again.

The game had been close, with the Lakers generally ahead but unable to pull away, until late in the third period. Beginning with 4:44 left in the period, the Lakers reeled off a 14-4 string that gave them a 13-point pad.

The best-of-seven series shifts to Seattle for games Friday night and Sunday afternoon.

At Philadelphia, Julius (Dr. J) Erving of Philadelphia '76ers was doing the unbelievable as he led the the '76ers to a 97-90 victory over Boston Celtics in the best-of-seven Eastern final. Erving scored 28 points, 22 in the second half.

Run and prove it News tells Rosie

REHOBOH BEACH, Del. (AP) — As suspicion grows over whether Rosie Ruiz really won the women's division of the Boston Marathon, the New York Daily News says it will put its money where her legs are, offering her $1,000 to run the distance again and come within a half-hour of her time.

There have been allegations Ruiz did not run the full distance in the marathon Monday. Spectators have said they saw her emerge from the crowd about a half mile from the finish. Her time for the 42-kilometre, 195-metre race was two hours, 31 minutes, 56 seconds.

In Thursday's edition, the Daily News said: "We're putting our money where your legs are," as a gesture of "good faith."

"All right, Rosie. We believe you, honest we do . . . Let's show those Beantowners and the rest of the world that you, a New Yorker, beat 'em fair and square . . . Give us a call, Rosie."

The New York Post quoted Thursday unidentified Boston Marathon sources as saying Ruiz will be disqualified Friday and the second-place finisher, Jacqueline Gareau, a 27-year-old Montrealer, will be designated as the race winner.

Meet-the-racers day at Western

Western Speedway will open its gates on a new decade Sunday.

The Langford oval will feature a Meet-the-Racer day with drivers, cars and mechanics on hand to practice and meet the public. The event gets underway at 4 p.m. and there is no admission charge.

Regular racing action starts May 3 with all three classes of cars — jalopies, stock cars and super-stocks — scheduled to compete starting with time trials at 7 p.m.

The jalopy class, considered the first step for training auto racers, will be expanded this season. A total of 38 vehicles are already registered and Western manager Tony Mortel said Wednesday he expects the field to swell to about 50.

Part of the competition will be among the seven high schools which have submitted jalopy entries under a new program.

"They're a tremendously competitive class," said Mortel.

In order to make conform to a trend throughout the Pacific Northwest, all super-stocks this year will boast 350 cubic-inch engines, which can turn out a little more useful horsepower than the 383's most local drivers ran last season.

Among the premier events returning this season are Speedweek Northwest appearances on July 22 and 24 and the Canada 200 for super-stocks Sept. 19-20. Mortel explained that the Speedweek "Pepsi Challenge" races held at several tracks in Washington and British Columbia are "fast becoming one of the most competitive series in the Pacific Northwest." The Canada 200 will be strictly an invitational competition this season among 20 to 24 of the top drivers on the Pacific coast.

Another date to remember is June 7. That's when the highly competitive Washington Midget Racing Association returns to Western after an absence of several years.

One competitor who isn't expected to appear is Evel Knievel — despite being listed in early programs as coming June 11. Knieval is apparently making $108,000 per show right now in South America and "he won't be able to make it."

Racing reigns supreme

Hold your horses.

Part of the fun of racing is betting. But don't think you have to know all about the horses and jockeys. Go with a hunch, a name, a number, a color. Wager a little or a lot. Bet one race or all ten. It's fun and exhilarating and very exciting. So come to The Track, where racing reigns supreme.

Maureen bidding for third pin crown

Only one woman will be gunning for a third crown in the two tenpin divisions as bowlers hit the lanes Sunday in the 17th annual Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs.

There isn't any shortage of former winners who have qualified for rolloffs in the Victoria Times-sponsored contest, which starts at 1 p.m. at Mayfair Lanes.

But most have only claimed the laurels once.

The exception is defending-champion Maureen King, who also took the title in 1975, and qualified this season with a 175-192-231 — 598 series in the eighth week of competition.

Other former women champions back in the running are Lorna Pollock and Emmy Plesch. Lorna, who qualified during the second week with a 226-193-189 — 608 effort, took her rolloff title in 1970, and Emmy, who earned a berth during the fourth week with a 203-212-191 — 606 series, collected her title in 1978.

Henry Loo (1964), Rick Blake (1968), Rod Caddell (1969), Keith Snelling (1972) and Ken Grexton (1976) are back again.

Loo made it with a 205-222-233 — 660 effort in the 16th week; Blake returned with a 229-225-207 — 661 series in the 17th week; Caddell connected with a 220-191-246 — 657 spread in the 13th week; Snelling returned to the running after rolling a 215-236-191 — 642 effort in the 11th week; and Grexton captured his berth with a 204-230-253 — 687 series in the second week.

Fivepin winners in the weekly contest stage their rolloffs at 1 p.m. May 4 at Town and Country Lanes.

All bowlers competing in regular league play on southern Vancouver Island lanes had opportunities to earn berths in the rolloffs. During each of the 26 weeks of the contest, bowlers rolling the highest three-game scratch series in each of four divisions — men's and women's fivepins and men's and women's tenpins — collected Bowler-of-the-Week awards and qualified for the rolloffs.

Rolloffs will follow the same three-game scratch format with the Victoria Times and the lanes involved sharing the cost of bowling fees.

Winners of rolloffs will win Times Trophies and any champion who is also a daily subscriber to the Victoria Times will receive a bonus reward of $150.

Surgery successful

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Hartford Whalers say that surgery on Al Smith's left knee was successful and the goaltender will be ready for the 1980-81 National Hockey League season.

Stockers go inter-city as women's softball set

Play will get under way in the Victoria and Saanich Women's Softball League's 1980 season Sunday without City champions Stockers North Americans.

Last year, Stockers played in both the Victoria-Saanich League and the Vancouver Senior "A" Women's League but have decided this season, because the schedule is too heavy, to concentrate on just the Vancouver league.

Some of the teams will have new names and others new coaches as the 1980 season makes its start.

Last year's VI90 Vicettes will be back under the name of New York New York and will be managed and coached by Jim Oliver. But they'll be without Dianne Daniels and Lori Skinner, who have gone up to the Senior "A" Stockers team.

Another team picking up a new name will be Esquimalt Combos, this season to be known as Victoria Athletics. They'll be coached by Chuck Shanckuk. Veteran 'Smokey' Green is the manager.

Entering the league for the first time will be Vidalin Construction, managed and coached by Bob Quinn.

The remainder are pretty well all returning teams like City and provincial Senior "C" champions Island Dryco Breakers, managed and coached by Dave Chewpoy, assisted by Ben Szumack; Bemisters Welding, runners-up last season to Stockers for the City championship, coached by Carl Bolton and Dave Wigston and managed by Barry Rankin; Butler Brothers, coached by Curtis Olsen and managed by Curtis Henry.

Strathcona Stingers will be managed and coached by Andre de Hoog, Tillicum Shoppers Drug Mart handled by Jim Hickman, Sharon Ferrill, Maxine Stovel and manager Carry Mason, and MacDonalds Furniture coached and managed by Bill MacDonald assisted by Bill Palliser. MacDonalds are returning to the league after a year's absence.

Island Dryco Breakers will play Victoria Athletics and New York New York will take on McDonald Furniture on the two Hyacinth Park diamonds when the league gets started at 11 a.m. Sunday.

Then it's Tillicum Shoppers versus Strathcona Stingers and Vidalin Construction against Butler Brothers at 1 p.m.

Canadians trim Brazil

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (CP) — Forward Romel Raffin of Kitchener, Ont., celebrated his 26th birthday Wednesday night by scoring career-high 20 points and leading the game in rebounds as Canada beat Brazil 98-81 in the Americas' pre-Olympic basketball qualifying tournament.

The victory kept Canada undefeated in five games and handed Brazil its first loss in four. Canada, Brazil and Puerto Rico have qualified for the Summer Olympics from the seven-country tournament, but the Canadian government announced it will support a boycott of the Moscow Games.

His 'only bad pitch' ruins Kison no-hit bid

By The Canadian Press

"It was the only bad pitch he threw all afternoon," said California Angels' catcher Tom Donahue after pitcher Bruce Kison had lost a no-hit bid in the ninth inning of a 17-0 victory over Minnesota Twins in American League baseball action Wednesday night.

Twins' left fielder Ken Landreaux lined Kison's pitch into the left field corner for a double with one out in the ninth inning to spoil the no-hit bid.

"I tried to get Landreaux out on a slider," said Kison. "It got up and away."

Kison, a right-hander formerly with Pittsburgh Pirates until he signed a free agent contract with the Angels for $2.4 million during the off season, posted his first American League victory with a sparkling shutout performance.

In other American League games, Kansas City Royals dumped Toronto Blue Jays 7-4, Cleveland Indians beat Milwaukee Brewers 7-3, New York Yankees nipped Baltimore Orioles 6-5, Detroit Tigers edged Texas Rangers 5-4 and Oakland A's defeated Seattle Mariners 5-2.

"A no-hitter would have been nice, but if you've got to lose one, that's the way to lose it," said Kison, referring to Landreaux's line drive double.

Kison's last bid at a no-hitter came last June 3 against San Diego Padres. Barry Evans broke up that effort, also with one out in the ninth inning.

Al Cowens and Fred Patek, both acquired from Kansas City in the off-season, each contributed three hits in the Angels' 17-hit barrage.

Reggie Jackson slammed a tie-breaking home run in the fifth inning, only the second regular-season home run of his career off Jim Palmer, to help New York beat Baltimore. Oscar Gamble and Jim Spencer also homered for the Yankees, while Ed Murray belted a pair of solo homers for the Orioles.

Mario Guerrero collected four hits and drove in two runs to lead Oakland past Seattle.

The Braves, who got off to a horrendous start this year losing nine of their first 10 games, edged San Diego Padres 2-1 for their second consecutive victory.

Elsewhere, Montreal Expos edged Pittsburgh Pirates 3-2, St. Louis Cardinals downed Chicago Cubs 3-1, New York Mets defeated Philadelphia Phillies 3-1, Cincinnati Reds shaded Houston Astros 3-2 in12 innings and Los Angeles Dodgers blanked San Francisco Giants 4-0.

Truck wins again

With a right to the body and a left to the head, Victoria's Mack Truck scored a fourth-round knockout over Joe Banks of Portland in the feature event of an eight-fight card in Seattle Tuesday night.

It was the longest anyone has lasted in the ring against the former Coast Guard employee and gave the unbeaten middleweight boxer his seventh win in as many professional fights.

Truck, whose real name is Jerry Reddick, fights next on a pro card in Vancouver on May 15.

Canada makes a point

GOTEBORG, Sweden (AP) — Randy Gregg's goal with 39 seconds remaining in the game gave Canada's Olympic team a 4-4 tie against Finland in their final Sweden Cup championship hockey game Wednesday night.

It was Canada's first point in the five-country tourney after losses to the Soviet Union, Sweden and Czechoslovakia. Sweden plays the Czechs in the final game today.

The Soviet Union, 4-0, won the title in the tournament, which serves as a rehearsal for next year's world championships.

Forest Gains final round

By Canadian Press

The European Cup soccer final between cup holder Nottingham Forest of England and West Germany's Hamburg promises to be a classic confrontation between two exhilarating attacking sides.

However, the fact that it will be played May 28 in Madrid's breathtaking Bernabeu Stadium will be a painful reminder of what might have been for Spanish champion Real Madrid.

The first winner of the trophy in 1956, Real's dreams of not only playing host to but also participating in the 25th final were shattered Wednesday night in Hamburg.

Like Forest, Real had built up a 2-0 semi-final, first-leg lead on its own ground two weeks ago.

But while forest qualified for the final despite losing 1-0 to Ajax Amsterdam in the Netherlands, Real was thrashed 5-1 by Hamburg.

Ajax, winner of the trophy in 1971, 1972 and 1973, laid seige on the Forest goal but found England International goalkeeper Peter Shilton equal to the test.

Shilton was beaten for the only time in the 65th minute when Danish International Soren Lerby sent a dipping header into the net.

In Wednesday night's European Cup Winners' Cup semi-final second leg, Arsenal of England and Valencia of Spain qualified for the final in Brussels on May 14.

Arsenal surprisingly beat Juventus of Turin 1-0 in Italy after having been held to a 1-1 draw in the first game in London. The hero was 20-year-old substitute Paul Vaessen who had only been on the pitch 10 minutes when he headed home a Graham Rix cross three minutes from time.

That's why we're holding our gigantic Pre-inventory Sale with prices so low that we're practically giving the stuff away! I mean, we want the stock reduced drastically!! Before the judge

A 21-year-old man described as a good but not overly aggressive lacrosse player was sentenced to nine months in jail after pleading guilty in provincial court Wednesday to the Nov. 21 attempted holdup of a Colwood grocery store.

Judge Lorne Pearce handed out a concurrent, six-month term on the second charge.

Court was told Whitney-Griffiths entered the store wearing a ski toque over his face and demanded money from 45-year-old Samuel Chong, the store owner.

Chong told the bandit, who held a revolver at his stomach, that he had no money. A brief struggle ensued, during which Chong pressed an intercom system to the back of the store.

Chong's wife came out and began yelling and screaming, at which point Whitney-Griffiths fled with Chong in pursuit.

Smith said the store owner noticed Whitney-Griffiths' car was still running, and took the keys out of the ignition. The accused came back at that point and said to Chong: "Please excuse me this once, I won't do it again."

Another struggle began over the car keys and Chong fell to the ground, striking his head.

As Whitney-Griffiths was pulling away in his vehicle, he told a witness: "The man (Chong) needs a doctor, get this man a doctor."

Colwood RCMP recovered the gun, a .32-calibre revolver, on the ground near the store and the toque from Chong's wife, who had taken it from Whitney-Griffiths.

In his statement made at the Colwood police detachment, the accused said he woke up about 7:15 or 7:20 p.m. and decided he needed money. He told officers he was being pressured by the family to go to Hawaii with them.

"If they can do it on TV, there's no reason why I couldn't give it a good try," his statement read.

Defence lawyer George Jones called three character witnesses, teacher Robert John Meikle of Dunsmuir, Esquimalt police sergeant Archie Browning, and psychologist Dr. Philip Perry.

Browning, a Canadian lacrosse Hall-of-Fame member, said he had known the youth for 15 years. Whitney-Griffiths played lacrosse with his son.

Browning said he was shocked when he read about the incident. He called it completely out of character for Whitney-Griffiths, whom he described as a good lacrosse player who was not overly aggressive.

Dr. Perry said Whitney-Griffiths had been a patient since early December and seemed genuine in looking at his life and realizing major changes were needed.

Jones said his client had tremendous potential as an athlete, was engaged and "jeopardized everything in one foolish moment."

"There are robberies and there are robberies," Jones said, "But this is the most bizarre . . ."

He emphasized the gun was not loaded and that Whitney-Griffiths did not even think it would fire. He said the youth did not want to hurt anybody and that the victim was hurt while assaulting Whitney-Griffiths.

Jones called it an act of a confused young man.

"The whole thing was a farce. When there was opposition, he caved in."

Judge Pearce said it was obvious the accused was a handsome, intelligent young man who was well respected. The judge also said he was satisfied Whitney-Griffiths had already learned a bitter lesson.

"But I must keep in mind the victim. People who run small corner stores are very vulnerable, they must be protected.

"You knew the gun wasn't loaded. Mr. Chong didn't.

"It must be made clear to anyone with the same temptations," Pearce stated, "They must bear the consequences."

He said the sentence he was about to impose was the minimum because "you need strengthening of your moral fibre."

He said he would recommend Whitney-Griffiths serve his sentence at the Boulder Bay facility where there is an Outward Bound program.

He also placed Whitney-Griffiths on a year's probation, ordered the destruction of the weapon, and said the accused must not own or possess weapons or ammunition for five years.

Bernard Joseph Kell, 760 Queens, was charged with having the care and control of a vehicle while impaired and a blood-alcohol reading over .08.

He was charged after incidents Tuesday night in the 2600-block Douglas involving a number of utility poles and parked cars.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said Victoria police obtained two breath test readings of .42 and one of .41 following Kell's arrest.

Kell was released on $500 recognizance on conditions that he surrender his driver's licence, not sit in the driver's seat of any vehicle, not possess or consume any liquor, not enter any licenced premise or liquor store, and accept Drug and Alcohol Rehabilitation Society counselling as directed by the bail supervisor.

Kell was remanded until next Wednesday for plea.

'Persistent nuisance'

A Victoria man was told in B.C. Supreme Court Wednesday he is a persistent and substantial nuisance.

Mr. Justice Lloyd McKenzie made the comment while dismissing an application by Richard Harvey Moore, 915 Empress, for an order compelling Victoria Police Chief W.J. Snowdon and former chief Jack Gregory to investigate his complaint that three policemen entered his home Dec. 20, 1978, without a proper search warrant.

McKenzie said Moore's petition for a court order had no basis other than a large number of imaginary grievances against justice of the peace John Hodacsek, who signed the search warrant, policemen Bernard Spaven, Frank Whitton and Donald Bland, Gregory and Snowdon, drug prosecutor Martha McNeely and numerous others.

McKenzie said Moore's array of complaints were without limit and without foundation and included allegations of forgery and criminal insanity on the part of the three policemen.

He said Moore's assertions cannot be taken seriously as a complaint under the Police Act and in any event, his failure to give notice to the provincial attorney-general of his application was in itself fatal to his case for a court order.

Moore, who represented himself in court, asked that Gregory and Snowdon be ordered to investigate his complaint that the policemen entered his home with an improper and unsigned search warrant.

He alleged that the prosecution introduced a counterfeit or forged warrant at his trial where he was convicted of possession of marijuana.

McKenzie adjourned the case at one point to get the original of the search warrant produced at the trial. He said it was signed by Hodacsek Dec. 20, 1978, and appeared to be identical to an affidavit from Moore himself.

Moore replied that he could not see any difference but it was still his contention that the search warrant was typed later and this was the first time he had seen it. He alleged it was a forged document.

McKenzie said if it was a valid search warrant, there was nothing for the police chief to investigate.

Cross-examined by city solicitor Jacob de Villiers, Moore complained of an improper search, a counterfeit search warrant and perjured testimony by police.

But de Villiers, in his summation, said it was now evident Moore's complaint was frivolous and it was clear that the search warrant was issued in the normal way.

He noted that there is no legal requirement for police to exhibit a search warrant or even to give a copy of a search warrant.

He said Moore had made libellous allegations "against all and sundry" and it would be incredible if any investigation would come to any other conclusion than that the police had a valid search warrant which was produced in court Wednesday and which was in existence at the time the search was carried out.

By AL FORREST

"It's an encouraging sign," says Darryl Willoughby, director of the summer youth hiring program.

"This kind of enthusiasm makes them good employees, even if they don't have experience," Willoughby said.

His advice to them all: prepare a personal resume and start making the rounds.

"I urge them to make a list of about 12 places they would like to work. Next they should get to know the 12 employers.

"Probably they will all say they are not hiring right now — but that shouldn't stop them. They (the job-seekers) should make a second visit to all 12 one week later.

"Leave a copy of the resume with the employer. Soon he will associate the face and the resume. Vacancies can occur at any time."

But on May 1 everything moves to Willoughby's office at 2653 Douglas.

"We handle placement of all young people, students and others, between 15 and 24."

By mid-May many of the university students will have jobs and the massive task of finding employment for high school students will start in earnest.

The office found jobs for 950 of them. In addition 438 casual jobs were filled.

"We hope to match or surpass both totals this summer."

Employers looking for young employees can phone their vacancies to the UVic office at 477-1807. On May 1 any jobs not filled will be transferred automatically to Douglas street. The phone number there is 388-3458.

But students are advised not to phone. All young job-seekers should appear in person at the office.

Starting May 1 it will be open Monday to Friday 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Willoughby said employers will find most young people to be good, enthusiastic workers, even if they do not have much work experience.

By June 1, the Canada Employment Centre for Students will be looking for a large number of householder jobs.

These include gardening, basement or garage clean-up and minor repairs.

The minimum wage is $3 an hour, or $2.60 for those under 18.

Householder jobs are ideal for high school students because many of them have a number of things they have to do during the summer.

"They may be going to camp or to hockey school. A few days work gives them some experience and a bit of cash. It helps the householder and the student, too."

Willoughby said he was impressed by a young man who knocked on his door and asked if he needed any work done around the house.

"It turned out he needed some money so he could attend hockey camp. I gave him a job. You can't help but be impressed by an attitude like that."

Willoughby, 26, graduated from the University of Victoria in September with a bachelor degree in economics.

All the jobs, including Willoughby's, end in September.

After that, he is considering taking a masters degree before looking for permanent employment.

Task force to examine teacher salary talks

The B.C. School Trustees' Association has created a task force to look into teacher salary negotiations.

The task force's work is expected to be completed by Feb. 15, 1981, after probing such matters as provincial bargaining policy, the scope of teacher negotiations, local control of bargaining, the teachers' right to strike, the effect of picket lines on teaching staff and zonal bargaining.

Association president Rubymay Parrott wrote to Education Minister Brian Smith saying he should review the present, outmoded collective bargaining and arbitration process.

She said changes in legislation are necessary if 75 separate authorities are to balance to the monolithic collective bargaining power of the B.C. Teachers' Federation.

Parrott suggested the present system, which ends with binding arbitration, apparently rewards those who sit and wait instead of those who actually try to negotiate.

Record to UNICEF

Thomas Hives, treasurer of the local UNICEF branch said donations totalled $31,000, nearly double the previous year's $16,000.

The money was raised through Christmas card sales, Halloween collections — which increased 65 per cent over 1978 — and various youth and individual projects including Al Howie's 400-mile jog to Port Hardy.

CRD can't decide who pays for buses

The Capital Regional Board Wednesday failed to decide who should share the cost of the $2.2-million public transit deficit.

By a 26-26 weighted vote, directors at a hot and heavy session that lasted two hours threw out a transit planning and management committee recommendation that Salt Spring Island not be excluded from the hydro surcharge which will underwrite the deficit.

The committee had recommended a review at the end of the year. The review would have determined whether bus service between ferry terminals and downtown Victoria had improved. If not, directors would have considered letting Salt Spring Islanders opt out.

But after lengthy wrangling the directors decided to table the issue until regional staff prepares a report to include recommendations for a cost-sharing formula.

Earlier, on a motion by Langford director Ed Lubick, directors had voted 27-25 to also exclude parts of North Saanich, the Highlands and Metchosin from the surcharge.

They also suggested the problem be tossed back to the transit committee but committee chairman Norma Sealey insisted the board deal with the matter.

Exasperated, she noted that many parts of the regional district could make the claim to opt out on the grounds of minimal service.

Finance Minister Hugh Curtis (MLA for Saanich-The Islands) has promised Salt Spring Islanders they will not have to pay. Under legislation made when he was municipal affairs minister the islanders could have opted out of a gasoline tax but legislation would have to be amended to give them the same option on the hydro surcharge.

Curtis has also appealed for exclusion of the Outer Gulf Islands and some parts of the Western Community.

"It's getting to be more of a circus than a board meeting," North Saanich director Harold Parrott noted, saying it looked as if the four core municipalities will have to pick up the tab for the whole deficit.

Fitness given $500 push

Capital Regional District employees and their families received a $500 helping hand Wednesday in expanding their fitness program.

The finance and personnel committee agreed to contribute the money toward the CRD Challenge Cup, which will be held at Juan de Fuca Arena on Sunday, June 8.

Events will include a 10-kilometre team run, a relay with eight members of a team each running 50 metres, a swimming relay and innertube water polo. There will also be an obstacle course race. Some family events are scheduled and the four-hour session will finish with a family swim.

Grant McRadu, spokesman for the CRD Fitness Committee, said the first competition will include only regional district employees and their families.

Mayne gets relief nurse

The Capital Region District has agreed to provide a relief nurse on at least a temporary basis.

Dingwell is the only regular medical practitioner on the island and is on call 24 hours a day seven days a week.

The residents feared she would quit because of the workload and felt the region would have difficulty finding a replacement.

In a brief to the regional community health and social services committee, the association pointed out the population can swell to 6,000 during summer months, 10 times the year-round resident population.

"No medical practitioner can safely and competently provide this amount of medical service," the brief said.

The decision to hire a relief nurse was made at a meeting of association members, Campbell and regional officials on Tuesday.

More than 100 district residents have signed up for the tourist emergency housing service but hundreds more are needed, says the Visitors Information Centre.

"We are particularly interested in finding people who will make their homes available late in the evening — up to 11 p.m.," said Rita Wilson, the VIC director in charge of the program.

"On most occasions we will only need the overflow housing late in the evening."

The situation may be complicated this year if the Victoria Princess, formerly the Queen of Prince Rupert, arrives in Victoria after 6 p.m. on its second run from Seattle.

The ferry's schedule is not confirmed yet but its second run will arrive late in the afternoon.

Most hotels have a policy of not holding a room after 6 p.m. unless there is a deposit. This could result in a need for the overflow housing program on a regular basis.

Residents volunteering a spare bedroom to the program will have their premises inspected by the VIC to assure it is suitable accommodation for tourists.

"The service is basically sleeping only. Breakfast may be supplied if the visitor requests it."

However, she said the intention is to provide emergency sleeping facilities only and the visitors, hopefully, would use the city's restaurants for meals.

"We only direct people to overflow housing when the district's hotels are full. That is, if the alternative is for people to sleep in their car.

Minimum rate is $10 and it can go as high as $30, depending on facilities. The rates are less than what tourists would pay for equivalent accommodation in a hotel.

Mrs. Wilson said early indications are the overflow housing service will be required all summer.

Rooms are needed as far away as Sooke and Sidney.

"Everything will be done by phone. If a tourist arrives in Sidney and cannot find accommodation in the hotels there, he can phone our number and find out if there is any hotel space in Victoria. If everything is full, we can direct him to overflow housing in Sidney so he won't have to drive into town."

Similarly, rooms are also needed in the western community, as far away as Sooke.

There will be 10 districts established with a chairman looking after each. Everything will be co-ordinated from the Causeway tourist bureau, which will stay open until just before midnight to handle the calls during the peak of the season.

Residents offering rooms to the program may phone the information centre at 382-2127 during regular business hours.

After May 1 a separate number will be installed for the program.

Press time for local author

Victoria author Harry McKeever is a survivor and a fictional account of the event he lived through has just been picked up by Tower Books, a New York firm that is one of the largest paperback publishers in the world.

McKeever says he's been walking on air since he learned of the sale of Hell Above Water, his story of the sinking of the British troopship Laconia by a U-boat in the South Atlantic in the fall of 1942. It is his 10th book and he says it took him about six months to write.

There was only a handful of survivors of the sinking in which more than 3,500 lost their lives. Only nine of the 50 or 60 people in McKeever's lifeboat survived the week adrift before the very U-boat that sank the ship towed the lifeboat to a Vichy French port.

McKeever came to B.C. in 1951 and he was publicity director of the ministry of tourism for years. He lives with his wife at 1259 Stancil Lane.

Slug bait hazardous to pets

Slug bait can be hazardous to the life and health of pets, the B.C. Veterninary Medical Association has warned.

"Dogs seem to be attacted to the meal-like slug bait and may eat it directly from the ground in the garden or may chew their way into a box stored carelessly in the garage," the association said.

The active ingredient in the bait is metaldehyde.

Early signs of poisoning are drooling and hyperexcitability which start anytime between 15 minutes and two hours after the bait has been eaten.

Several incidents of the poisoning have already been reported this season.

Outlook best in the west

OTTAWA (CP) — The economies of the four western provinces will grow at more than four times the national rate of 0.6 per cent, the Conference Board in Canada said today.

Alberta takes the lead once again with a growth rate of 4.7 per cent, while the slowest growing western province will be British Columbia.

B.C. is expected to achieve a growth rate of only 1.1 per cent because of a slowdown in its forestry and related manufacturing industries.

Canada will have no over-all increase in gross national product in 1980 and the provincial growth in gross domestic product — which includes some extra items — will show an over-all real increase of only 0.6 per cent.

"Moreover," the private forecasting agency said, "the regions and industries of the country will share the burden of these difficulties in very uneven fashion."

For New Brunswick and Ontario it will be a worse year than in the other provinces.

In its quarterly provincial forecast, the independent research institute said New Brunswick's performance will decrease by one per cent during 1980 and Ontario's by 0.6 per cent.

In the East, the board forecasts gains in Quebec, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland this year, but each falls below one per cent, putting these provinces in a precarious situation.

"International developments, the outcome of labor negotiations, changes in government policy and even weather conditions are sufficiently unpredictable that any of these provinces might conceivably join Ontario and New Brunswick in experiencing an economic decline in 1980," the board warns.

The only bright note is the distribution of economic benefits among the provinces from the government's purchase of 137 F-18A fighter aircraft. But the board said it was still unclear what the distribution would be.

Nationally, only the mining industry is forecast to achieve big gains. Metal production will grow by 18 per cent during the year, high enough to justify mine expansion.

In other Western provinces:

—Saskatchewan will grow by almost 3.5 per cent mainly because of the anticipated recovery in crop production.

—Manitoba is expected to achieve the third highest growth rate at 1.8 per cent due to the above-average performance of the goods-producing sector.

The nervous young man in a tuxedo, seen by 300 million television viewers as he accepted a Hollywood Oscar for best animated short, no longer works for Canada's National Film Board. Eugene Fedorenko, the animator-director of Every Child, was one of the casualties of government cutbacks which hit the Montreal-based film board last year. Created in support of UNICEF and the International Year of the Child, Every Child is a comic yet tender statement about every child's right to a name and a home. It's currently playing in many Canadian theatres with the Oscar-winning best movie Kramer vs. Kramer. The NFB has won several Oscars over the years in a variety of categories.

Snowdon

Nainoa Thompson will never forget his 33-day Hawaii-to-Tahiti adventure on a Polynesian double sailing canoe. When the 20-metre Hokulea sailed into Papeete to the cheers of about 5,000 people, the 27-year-old Thompson became the first person of Hawaiian ancestry in more than 1,000 years to navigate the 2,500-nautical-mile voyage without modern navigational instruments. "And I'm still learning," Thompson said.

Clicking royal snapshots is worth more than putting up with royal domestic tiffs. Globe-trotting photographer, Lord Snowdon, says his 18-year marriage to Queen Elizabeth's younger sister Princess Margaret damaged his career. The often-stormy marriage, which ended in a 1978 divorce, got in the way of work, Snowdon says. He says he stopped taking pictures of the royal family almost altogether because of criticism that he was using his marriage to get exclusive assignments. Snowdon, 50, now is married to a former film production assistant, Lucy Lindsay Hogg, and they have a baby daughter.

When Robert Dustin Miller, 10, cleaned up a barn for 13 hours and then wasn't paid $1 an hour as promised he did what any adult might do: he went to court. The fifth-grade Kentucky student at La-Grange Elementary School received some satisfaction from the small claim's court complaint, according to Oldham District Judge Dennis Fritts, who reported the $13 out-of-court settlement paid to the youngster.The complaint was filed against an 80-year-old Louisville man who had agreed to pay the boy $1 an hour to clean up the barn April 4, the judge said. The man's identity wasn't disclosed.

Dear Abby:

I am enclosing a card I came across in my doctor's office. It advertises an organization called MTC (Make Today Count), dedicated to improving the quality of life of those who have been touched by serious illness.

I personally have Hodgkin's disease, but due to the excellent care I have received from my doctor, family and others, I have felt no need for help in coping with it. However, others among your readers may not be as lucky as I, so I am enclosing the 10 points entitled "How to Live with Illness." I hope you feel it merits space in your column.

J.C.S.

Dear Mr. S.:

I do, and here they are:

How to live with illness

By ORVILLE KELLY

1) Talk about the illness. If it's cancer, call it cancer. You can't make life normal again by trying to hide what is wrong.

2) Accept death as a part of life. It is!

3) Consider each day as another day of life, a gift from God to be enjoyed as fully as possible.

4) Realize that life is never going to be perfect. It wasn't before, and it won't be now.

5) Pray! It isn't a sign of weakness. it's a sign of strength.

6) Learn to live with your illness instead of considering yourself dying from it. We are all dying in some manner.

7) Put your friends and relatives at ease. If you don't want pity, don't ask for it.

8) Make all practical arrangements for funerals, wills, etc., and make certain your family understands them.

9) Set new goals; realize your limitations. Sometimes the simple things of life become the most enjoyable.

10) Discuss your problems with your family as they occur. Include the children if possible. After all, your problem is not an individual one.

Dear Abby:

Hartland suggested that the apartment manager give the lonely retired man who pestered her with questions odd jobs just to make him "feel useful." Trouble was, she overlooked our ever-present "Big Brother" (government).

The compassionate manager could become liable for the minimum hourly wage of $3.10, time-and-a-half pay above 40 hours a week and equal additional amount for damages, and a possible $10,000 fine and six months imprisonment for each day of willful violation.

Fed Up Lawyer

Dear Fed:

I can't practice law, but you can. Thanks for the legal advice.

Fostering: 'It just feels right'

By BRENDA DALGLISH

An obviously agitated woman answered the phone.

I explained that I'd like to talk to her about why she and her husband decided to become foster parents, about the rewards and disadvantages of opening their home to children.

With a strained laugh she agreed, saying it was a good thing the interview was a few days off.

The toddler she was looking after, she explained, had just broken about $100 worth of treasured Royal Albert china and she was having a hard time recalling "the rewards" right then.

But when I met Rae O'Keefe a few days later and saw the way she and her family treated the two smiling babies in their care it was obvious the Royal Albert disaster had been forgotten.

Rae had quit her job as a nurse and had just had a baby.

"I had all this brand new baby stuff and I started thinking there must be something I could do with it," she explained.

So armed with her nursing skills, she contacted the Ministry of Human Resources to see if there were children with medical problems she could help.

Since then 14 children have passed through the O'Keefe household, arriving in various conditions at any hour of the day or night and spending anywhere from a day to more than a year with the family.

The O'Keefes are what the ministry calls a temporary home. They take children who are in need of a home on a short-term basis. Often the children are newborn infants making a short stopover en route to an adoptive home.

Others are from single-parent homes and stay only until their own parent recovers from an illness, operation or an emotional problem that forced them to place their child temporarily with the ministry.

Others have more severe problems, like the toddler the family has looked after for 14 of its 16 months.

That youngster was born to a heroin addict and suffered all the symptoms of heroin withdrawal for many months while it was with the family.

He still has problems, Rae said, but looking at the dimpled, rosy-cheeked toddler it's hard to imagine.

She used him as an example of the good and bad aspects of fostering.

"For three months we tried to get him to hold a rattle. He was only sleeping, at the most, 20 minutes at a time and it all just seemed impossible. Then one day his hand started to move towards the rattle, it didn't reach the rattle but it started to move. That makes it all worthwhile."

Why do the O'Keefes provide a temporary home instead of keeping the children they look after?

"People always say, how can you get to love the children and then have to give them up. I guess it's hard to explain. We love them but when they leave us they're usually going to a permanent home where somebody really wants them. It just feels right."

Another couple, David and Anne, have chosen a different style of fostering.

After several months of careful thought and planning they decided to provide a permanent foster home.

They had no children of their own and they decided it might be difficult for them to become attached to a child only to have it leave them.

The ministry needs homes which can offer that kind of security, so it wasn't long before David and Anne became foster parents to Peter, a Grade 1 pupil.

The going hasn't been easy for either parents or child but after a year the wrinkles are starting to work themselves out.

The couple emphasized that careful thought should go into the decision to become foster parents.

"We decided to do it because we like kids. They're sort of fun to be around, to talk to and to do things with. But these kids have often had not very happy lives before and it takes a lot of patience to see them through," said David.

Peter agreed that it took time to get adjusted and told about having fights at school while he was settling in.

"Also, it took a lot of adjusting, not because he was a foster child, but just because there was another person in the house," said Anne.

They laugh about spending the last year hunting babysitters and watching the neighborhood for children Peter could play with.

Now the family is awaiting the arrival of a baby they've asked to adopt.

Brainwave studies allay damage fear

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

Our 4-year-old daughter had a convulsion when her temperature rose to 105 degrees. We were terrified and rushed her to the hospital. She was kept there for two days and then discharged. Tests did not show anything. Will she be brain damaged?

Mrs. C.L.A.

Dear Mrs. A.:

This is a terrifying experience. No matter how stable and secure people are, a convulsive seizure can be overwhelmingly frightening.

Such a seizure associated with a very high fever is not unusual. As a matter of fact, the seizure can be said to be nature's protective mechanism. It almost acts as a fuse to prevent further trouble. These fever-induced convulsions can be controlled by sponge baths and medication.

The fact that tests showed no underlying disease should be reassuring to you. All children who have had such an experience should have a complete neurological study to be sure that some basic problem is not overlooked. Brainwave studies and other technical electronic procedures should be done for two reasons. First, to rule out any underlying problem. Second, to alleviate your fears and set to rest any suspicion of permanent damage to the brain.

Dear Doctor:

I have been married for two years. I just learned that I have endometriosis of my womb. I not only worry about the condition itself but my greatest concern is that it will keep me from having a family. I would like to get as much information as I can about this.

Mrs. R.V.

Dear Mrs. V.:

I am certain that the information you seek only relates to you and your own problem. That information, of course, should be coming from your own doctor who should be the source of your greatest security. Reading medical books may only frighten or confuse you.

The endometrium is the delicate lining of the uterus, or womb. Endometriosis is a disorder in which the cells that line the inner surface of the uterus are displaced. These endometrial cells may then be found outside of the uterus, in the ovaries, the Fallopian tubes, and even in the abdominal cavity.

Treatment often involves the use of female hormones. These are given singly or in conjunction with others by the gynecologist who is in constant control of the endometriosis.

How your condition will affect the possibility of pregnancy depends upon the extent of your problem and the persistence of treatment.

"First you buy me a new coat and now a trip to Lion Safari Park. What's got into you lately?"

'Natural' tag hard to define

dr. elizabeth bright-see and jane hope

Question: "We've been reading a lot lately about the advantages of eating "natural foods." What is your opinion?

Answer: We really don't understand what the term natural foods really means. Let's look at two examples: Foods grown using an "organic" fertilizer without any herbicides or insecticides added; and synthetic versus natural vitamin supplements.

There's nothing really wrong with the so-called "organically" grown food. Perhaps you think food you've grown without adding any herbicides or whatever even tastes better. But usually, organic or "natural" foods cost more in the long run. Home gardening is great but in our largely urban society, there's not much hope for this activity to contribute greatly to our food supply. It isn't realistic to think we would survive globally on only organically grown foods. Most research hasn't shown that there's anything of great nutritional significance in organic fertilizers versus the minerals now being used.

As for natural versus synthetic vitamins — let's look at an example of ascorbic acid or vitamin C. Ascorbic acid is simply ascorbic acid. If you've identified vitamin C as ascorbic acid, then you shouldn't have to pay more for so-called vitamins just because they are supposed to be in their "natural" form. After all, vitamins are chemicals and the body can't tell the difference between synthetic or natural vitamins. Read labels carefully of vitamin supplements and compare costs. If you must buy vitamin supplements, look for the ones with the minimum dosage at the lowest cost.

Question: I'm overweight and I've been told that as well as learning to rethink what I eat, I must learn to rethink why I eat through behaviour modification. What does behaviour modification do?

Answer: Behaviour modification is really applied psychology. It's a whole series of techniques that looks into your behaviour, into cues that make you do certain things. It tries to make you aware of your actions. Most people aren't aware of why they're eating. Research has found that the simple procedure of keeping records is an enormous help in determining why you eat. Write down the circumstances under which you reach for a snack. Is it because you're at a movie and movies and popcorn simply go together, you think? Sometimes just the awareness of your actions is enough to stop you from eating certain things.

Then go a little further and learn certain tricks. Don't eat in the living room! Don't eat standing up! These are techniques — not gimmicks. Behaviour modification isn't short-term and it can't be accomplished overnight. It's a technique used to help if you are committed to changing your life style.

Your physician has a great role in this learning process because he can motivate you into action if you are at risk of heart disease because you're overweight, for instance. He may tell you that if you don't take care of your obesity problem, you're in deep trouble. That means a lot to you. It may be all you need. Then if you can get the proper help and counselling, you may have a chance.

But we'd like to make it clear that it's not easy. Many people don't make it the first or the second or even the third time around. What counts is that you're trying. We think when we get to the point in Canada where the number of people who need to reduce weight are doing so is greater than the number of people who are becoming obese, then we will have turned the weight management corner.

Road to Eden blocked

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — One of three sisters, naked and smeared with mustard when they were arrested in a stolen truck, says they were "high on sunshine and the Holy Spirit" and trying to get back to the Garden of Eden.

"We were reading the Bible and got filled with the Holy Spirit," Doshaline McCuin, 30, said Tuesday in a telephone interview from her county jail cell.

Mrs. McCuin, and her sisters, Charlene Roper, 27, and Sandra Lewis, 25, have been jailed since their arrest last week, unable to post $1,000 bond each on charges of joy-riding and indecent exposure.

Love of boss not enough for secretaries

MONTREAL (CP) — Maryse Langevin puts in about nine hours a day as secretary to her boss, John O'Brien, a marketing executive in downtown Montreal.

She has been at it for 15 years and loves her job.

"My whole thing is to try and help out the boss," she says. "Anything that makes it easier, I'll do. And I have a good boss who shows his appreciation."

This week is International Secretaries Week in Canada and it's aimed at "good bosses" like O'Brien. It will give him a chance to buy Maryse flowers and take her out to lunch.

But many other working women aren't as happy in their office jobs as Maryse, and this week means other things to them.

Dawn Wiltsie, an official of a busy Montreal secretarial school, says attitudes toward women in the workplace have not changed as fast as her students had hoped.

"Employment opportunities are greater, but management is still sexist to some degree," says Wiltsie.

Her school is using secretaries week to sponsor a series of seminars for women on "being your own boss," "starting your own business" and "opportunities for women in business."

The 250-member Montreal chapter of the National Secretaries Association is using the otherwise token week as a chance to hold educational seminars as well.

An organizer of the secretaries committee of Rank and File, a working women's consumers group, says it's all well and good that employers take their secretaries out to dinner and buy flowers this week, "but they forget about the other 51 weeks of the year."

"You can no longer be fired for being pregnant, but you can still be hassled to death," she says. "If you're hired for decoration, they don't want you around when you're eight months pregnant.

"And there's still nothing you can really do about the boss who says 'pick up your pay cheque at my apartment tonight.' If you refuse, you lose your job."

Statistics Canada figures from as recently as December, 1979, show women earn 61 per cent of what men earn — not an impressive gain from four years before, when the figure was 59 per cent.

Vivian Zackon, a former clerical and secretarial organizer with the Office and Professional Employees International Union, says the federal government itself is to blame for part of the disparity because of its 1975 wage-and-price controls system which limited salary increases to changes in percentages, rather than real dollars.

Human rights legislation in a number of province is challenging the gap. A number of laws already guarantee equal pay for equal work, but women are finding that these are almost useless unless the jobs of men and women are strictly comparable.

Laws already in force in Quebec and Ottawa, and under debate in Ontario, enforce the right to equal pay for work of equal value. For secretaries whose work is considered as "valuable" to a company as that of, say, its truckdrivers, the laws could mean vast changes in pay scales.

There have been few challenges yet under the existing laws, and only one, in Quebec, concerning secretarial work. Unionized female typists and receptionists in Baie Comeau, Que., won equal pay with male draftsmen and clerks in 1978 under the province's laws.

The virtual of absence of unions among secretaries may be one reason why this kind of success hasn't been repeated. Zackon says secretaries are very wary of joining unions because of reluctance to stick out their necks and perhaps jeopardize their jobs.

There's also the stigma of unions in the management-dominated office environment.

And some unions don't see organizing women as a priority, despite that fact that women make up 28 per cent of their membership.

English breakfast is losing ground

LONDON, ENGLAND (Reuter) — It was a Frenchman who suggested that the best way to survive English cooking was to eat breakfast three times a day. But there is bad news for those who consider the British breakfast an oasis of delight in an otherwise featureless culinary desert: It is in decline.

To secure a morning meal that sports the full trappings of porridge, kippers, eggs, sausages, bacon, mountains of toast with marmalade and tea, one is wise to leave southern England altogether and head north.

There are two threats to the English breakfast: The continental penchant for getting by with a crust of bread and a cup of coffee, and a more insidious assault by items of food popular in other countries.

Continental breakfast now is standard in most London hotels, and to move beyond it the visitor must be prepared to pay. To make bacon, fried eggs and other traditional breakfast treats appear on the breakfast table may add more than $4 to $6 to the bill.

But this development is less devastating than the intrusion of foreign foods. Muesli from Switzerland, yogurt from Poland, croissants from France, orange juice from California — now all are being consumed by Britons who formerly preferred their own breakfast fare.

Sainsbury's, one of the large food chains, has released statistics strongly suggesting that the traditional British breakfast may be on the way out.

Cereal is making startling inroads into the breakfast habits of the nation. Nowadays 40 per cent have cereal at breakfast-- well over double what it was two decades ago.

According to the statistics, one-quarter of the population makes do with a bread roll or piece of toast each morning. One Brition in five has no breakfast at all.

Why is the English breakfast losing ground? Part of the reason is the pace of life. Commuters are reluctant to spend time preparing a cooked meal before they head for buses and trains.

Also, may people have switched from manual jobs to service industries that do not require them to burn up large quantities of calories. They simply do not need the solid fuel that a cooked English breakfast provides.

To track down a breakfast with all the trimmings you must head to the cities and counties of the north, where tradition holds fast. Places like York, Leeds, Edinburgh and Aberdeen still offer breakfasts fit for real people.

But if you do manage to find a morning meal that meets traditional standards, don't shout that word "traditional" too loudly. It seems that the genuine English breakfast became common as recently as the 1920s.

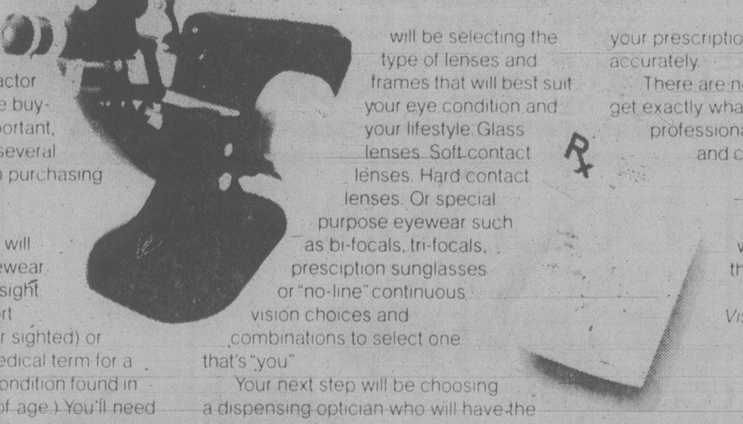
All about the other half of buying eyewear.



Many consumers have been finding out that price isn't the only factor to watch for when they're buying eyewear. Price is important, of course, but there are several factors to consider when purchasing your eyewear.

Eventually, everyone will require some kind of eyewear for better day to day eyesight. You may be myopic (short sighted) or hyperopic (far sighted) or presbyopic (that's the medical term for a weakened, mature eye condition found in people over forty years of age.) You'll need the right kind of eyewear to correct your vision. For reading. For seeing things up close. Or for looking far away. When your doctor gives you a prescription for your eyewear, your first decision will be selecting the type of lenses and frames that will best suit your eye condition and your lifestyle. Glass lenses. Soft contact lenses. Hard contact lenses. Or special purpose eyewear such as bi-focals, tri-focals, presciption sunglasses or "no-line" continuous vision choices and combinations to select one that's "you".

Your next step will be choosing a dispensing optician who will have the knowledge and experience to help you select the eyewear that's best for you. Prescription Optical's trained professionals have been the leaders in eyewear for over fifty five years, helping people with all kinds of special eyewear problems. We fill more cataract eyewear prescriptions than all of the other dispensing opticians combined. So you can be sure that your prescription will be filled quickly and accurately.

There are no bargains in eyewear. You get exactly what you pay for. Look for professional personnel, quality products and competetive prices. You'll find all of these important reasons at Prescription Optical. We'll be here to help when you want to see things more clearly.

EDMONTON (CP) — Creation of an Indian province with full provincial powers may be the only way to hold the country together, Chief Max Gros-Louis said Wednesday.

Gros-Louis, a Huron Indian leader based outside Quebec City, said in a telephone interview he believes the call by Alberta Indians for creation of an 11th province is a positive force for Canadian unity.

"If all Indians across Canada get together, they will help in uniting the country," he said.

Gros-Louis was reacting to statements by Joe Dion, president of the Indian Association of Alberta, who said Canada's 600 reserves should be granted full provincial status, with representation in Ottawa and a full-time Indian minister of Indian affairs.

The concept is being reviewed by Indian leaders across the country in preparation for a historic first meeting of Canadian Indian chiefs next week in Ottawa.

Dion said Wednesday Alberta Indians have drafted a charter for foundaton of the new, decentralized province which he expects will be approved at the Ottawa conference.

While Indian leaders outside Quebec hope provincial status will give them the right to self-government and freedom from provincial and federal control, Gros-Louis said he issue has deeper significance in Quebec.

"Can you imagine what will happen to (Quebec) Indian people if they separate?" he asked. "It's going to be terrible for us if they pull out."

Gros-Louis said the Quebec government already has a reputation for an unsympathetic attitude toward Indians and that things will only get worse if the province separates.

Building slumps

OTTAWA (CP) — Building permits dropped 11.2 per cent to $1.53 billion in February, from $1.37 billion in January, Statistics Canada said Wednesday.

In February, 1979, the value of planned building construction was $1.02 billion.

However, industrial and commercial building remained strong

Bugging Allmand a no-no, RCMP claim

OTTAWA (CP) — Undercover agent Warren Hart disobeyed RCMP orders when he secretly tape recorded a conversation with then-solicitor-general Warren Allmand in 1974, a former security service officer told the McDonald commission investigating RCMP activities Wednesday.

This disobedience was one of three incidents which led the force to drop Hart in December, 1975, after he had infiltrated and reported on black and native groups in Canada for 4½ years, said Jack Plummer, now retired from the force.

The zealous paid informer was sometimes hard to control and Plummer, his handler, occasionally was reprimanded by his superior officers for Hart's actions.

Plummer said he cursed Hart "in a half-hearted manner" when he defied orders and brought in a tape of a conversation between Allmand, the Mounties' boss, and Roosevelt Douglas, a black radical on whom Hart was spying.

However, Plummer said he was happy to listen to the tape.

The former Mountie said he never heard a tape Hart claimed to have of a conversation with former New Democratic Party MP John Rodriguez in Hart's car, which was secretly bugged.

Plummer also said he did not order Hart to record a talk Douglas gave the NDP members of the B.C. legislature, but he was not surprised he did so.

"He had the tape recorder and we counted on him to tape record conversations that were important to remember," Plummer said.

"He had the equipment. He had our authority to tape whenever convenient and it's entirely possible he had a tape recording that included the caucus."

Hart, an American on loan to the RCMP from the U.S. justice department, testified in January that his handlers ordered him to tape the Allmand meeting.

However, Plummer said it was Hart's idea and was rejected by RCMP headquarters.

Plummer said he was interested in listening to the tape because Hart said Allmand offered Douglas, a convicted American criminal who was fighting deportation from Canada, a job researching prison conditions.

The RCMP considered Douglas "a thorn in our sides" and it didn't seem logical for a cabinet minister to offer him a job, Plummer said. He destroyed the Allmand tape because it did not contain the alleged job promise.

Plummer also denied Hart's statement that his Mountie handlers considered Allmand a Communist, but added he thought the former solicitor-general had socialist tendencies.

The force decided to drop Hart late in 1975 — giving him two days to get out of the country or face jail — because of his involvement with some stolen cheques and an attempt to smuggle an Italian into the United States in the trunk of his car.

Forest fires hit Alberta

CALGARY (CP) — A rash of early spring forest fires caused by high winds, and hot weather has caught Alberta firefighters by surprise.

Five water bombers have been called in to assist in battling 53 blazes, mostly in the northern part of the province.

Fires have broken out in Slave Lake, Lac La Biche and Whitecourt-Peace River areas but no towns are threatened.

MONTREAL (CP) — Quebec Liberal Leader Claude Ryan led the no campaign into the home territory of his chief rival, Premier Rene Levesque, on Wednesday and compared the Levesque government to "the masters of the Kremlin."

The Levesque government has been distorting the history of Quebec to prove its case, said Ryan — head of the no forces in the May 20 referendum — in a speech to about 1,500 people in Taillon, the home riding of the premier who heads the yes forces.

He told residents of Matane that Quebecers have come a long way in recent years and have developed a much greater confidence in their ability to manage their own affairs.

While Ryan was in the Montreal area, Levesque's activities appeared to be geared more towards the media — especially television, a key element in the strategy of the yes forces.

This made it doubly painful for the yes camp when about 180 French and English CBC journalists in Montreal, Quebec City and Rimouski picked Wednesday for a 24-hour walkout that blacked out coverage of the premier's tour.

Study slams banks' anti-union tactics

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women called Wednesday for a federal government investigation of labor practices in the banking system, charging that the banks have repeatedly obstructed attempts by women workers to join unions.

This was a chief recommendation accompanying release of a report, Women and Unions, commissioned by the 30-member council, which says women can benefit from unions but face many obstacles in attempting to organize.

The council also recommended that sanctions in the Labor Code against employers who obstruct union organization should be strengthened and that the Canadian Labor Relations Board be enabled to make decisions about unfair labor practices faster, to minimize obstruction.

It took a shot at union rights in the public sector, too, saying the Public Service Staff Relations Act should be amended to allow unions to negotiate a re-evaluation of job classifications as a method of acquiring equal pay for work of equal value.

The study on women and unions singled out the chartered banks as a prominent employer in the private sector where opposition to unionization was found to be stronger than in the public sector.

"The banks have mounted co-ordinated, relentless and often sophisticated opposition to union campaigns among bank workers," the study said.

More complaints against the banks than any other industrial sector have been lodged by unions with the Canadian Labor Relations Board and, the study said, "the banks have utilized every anti-union technique available to intimidate and penalize union employees."

Gov't pilots were told to fly unsafe airplanes

TORONTO (CP) — Federal ministry of transport pilots were ordered last July 4 to fly aircraft that had been found unsafe, a lawyer representing civil aviation inspectors said Wednesday.

Michelle Swenarchuk told a federal inquiry into aviation safety that the pilots were told they would be fired or suspended if they did not resume flying Beechcraft King Air 90s, even though a senior transport ministry official had written to the manufacturer only the day before to say the planes were not airworthy.

She said all ministry aircraft — especially the 16 Beechcrafts similar to the one in which two ministry pilots died last May when a wing fell off — should be grounded until the ministry's aircraft maintenance system is improved and the fleet's safety can be guaranteed.

Investigation into the crash at Sherrington, Que., indicated that a maintenance check which would have revealed a crack in the wing attachment fitting was not done on time.

Money Talk

A series in which Montreal Trust answers your questions.

"Investment Fund- what are the advantages?"

"I'm interested in diversifying my portfolio of stocks. What are the advantages of an Investment Fund such as yours?"

The main advantages are simplicity for you, the investor, and the security of knowing that the Montreal Trust Investment Fund is managed by a well-respected team with many years of experience.

Our Investment Fund has both Canadian and International sections that invest in attractive equity securities.

You invest in units (a minimum of 10). At the end of each month, the current market value of these units is determined, then the income is credited to your account. This is paid to you quarterly or automatically re-invested, whichever you prefer.

Withdrawal is easy. Just let us know before the 20th of the month. The current value plus income accumulated is then paid to you without penalty.

Our charge for administering is ¾ of 1% per annum on your capital's value. But this is deducted from your income, so your full investment is always working for you. You pay no sales commission and there's no loading charge for buying and selling.

Mortgage down payments

"Could you tell me the different types of mortgage plans you have available and what kind of down payment I'd have to make on each?"

In answer to your question, there are three types of mortgages:

1. Conventional (uninsured): 75%
This type of mortgage requires a down payment of 25% of the sales price or appraised value of the home, whichever is the lesser. It eliminates the need for mortgage loan insurance coverage, thereby saving the applicant a 1%-1¼% premium based on the loan.

2. High Ratio Loan (insured): 90%

3. NHA (National Housing Act) mortgage: 95%
The down payment required on this type of mortgage is 5% of the value established by the CMHC (Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp.).

On all these mortgages, the interest rate normally varies with the type of loan and the term of the loan.

If you have any questions about our services, write, call, or come in and see us at the address below.

Western premiers united

Times News Services

LETHBRIDGE — A weaker Canadian dollar would be preferable to high interest rates, says Saskatchewan Premier Allan Blakeney.

Blakeney and the three other Western premiers ended their two-day annual conference on Wednesday with a joint statement telling the federal government how it can avoid "unacceptable and unfair" interest rates and achieve a made-in-Canada economic policy.

Premiers Peter Lougheed of Alberta, Bill Bennett of British Columbia and Sterling Lyon of Manitoba joined Blakeney in urging the federal government to reduce its budget deficit and the deficit in Canada's balance-of-payments, which represents a net flow of money out of the country.

The two-day meeting resulted in a remarkable degree of unanimity on economic matters, Lougheed said at the closing news conference.

Nine joint statements, most of them restatements of positions taken in the past, were produced at the meeting..

But it also featured picketing of the motel meeting site by handicapped persons looking for rights legislation, by members of the National Farmers Union looking for radical change in agriculture policies, and by striking nurses.

The premiers said the time is right for negotiation of a renewed Confederation and that a no vote in the Quebec referendum would be the go-ahead signal for 'intensive negotiations."

A yes vote would not preclude negotiations as long as Premier Rene Levesque did not insist on talking about sovereignty-association. But Lyon said there was fear a yes vote would lead to disintegration of the country.

Blakeney said Western Canada formerly lacked the political and economic power to insist on what it considered a fair deal. But "we now have that power."

The premiers produced a six-point plan to reduce the balance of payment and federal budgetary deficits and, simultaneously, cut the interest rates for home-owners and small businesses.

B.C. Premier Bill Bennett said that if the proposals were implemented by the federal government, it could produce a Made in Canada economic policy — "rather than one that is the tail of the dog for the U.S."

The premiers' six-point plan was:

— Domestic prices of oil and natural gas must rise towards international levels. The increased revenue should be re-invested in Canada to reduce the reliance on foreign capital and energy sources.

— Tax measures should be introduced to stem Canadian investment dollars.

— Canadians should be given incentives to encourage them to invest in companies doing business in Canada.

— The federal government should consider approving further exports of natural gas as a means of reducing the balance of payments deficit.

— The federal government should participate in large viable, capital projects — port facilities, railroad upgrading, hydroelectric and other energy projects — to increase employment.

CNR earns $208.2M in profits

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian National Railways earned a profit of $208.2 million in 1979 despite heavy losses on moving Prairie grain and operating Montreal's rail commuter services, says the state-owned agency's annual report tabled Wednesday in the Commons.

Profits in 1978 were $136.1 million.

President R. A. Bandeen said $41.6 million of the profit was paid as a dividend to federal coffers and the remaining $166.6 million went for new plant and equipment.

Record revenues of $3.294 billion were earned in 1979 along with record expenditures of $2.900 billion the report says.

It cost an estimated $95 million for the railway to carry grain at the statutory Crowsnest Pass rates and there was a $7.3-million loss on the Montreal commuter service.

By AUDREY JOHNSON

One of the piano adjudicators in the Victoria Music Festival surveyed the first two days of hundreds of piano entries and commented: "There's certainly a plethora of talent here."

If it did nothing else the festival would serve a valuable function by providing an in-depth survey of the impressive quality of performing talent and teaching in this area.

A recital here, a dance event there, a school concert now and then, can give no adequate impression of the sheer volume and consistent quality in which this region is incredibly rich.

But there is more. All the individual benefits of artists listening to other artists; of performing for the fresh and critical ear of outside experts; of bringing one's gifts from the studio and testing them on a knowledgable audience.

One of the festival's major adult classes has already taken place. An open class for any voice, the lieder is in effect a duet event for voice and piano and both artists are adjudicated. Winners are chosen on the basis of their effective duo performance even more than on their individual artistry.

There must be sensitivity; an intelligent understanding of the poetic content; thought and mood clearly expressed.

Dual adjudication for this class brought comments from both vocal judge David Astor and Alexandra Munn, piano. If the latter's pithy witticisms struck some devoted lieder-ites as inappropriate to the occasion, they were quips that also had the merit of relaxing taut nerves once the first shockwave had passed.

"Thank goodness," she said, "we no longer talk about 'accompanists' but properly call the pianist in a recital an associate artist."

Astor conservatively found the class of 12 entries "nice" although there had been some indifferent singing, he said. The ensemble on the whole was very good.

The adjudicators agreed the duo of Ingrid and Rita Attrot was best. Susan Sereda and Carol Reideger, Nancy Holmes and Kelly Charlton and Elizabeth Zunti with Malcolm Woodland were runners-up.

One of the festival's several Open Performance classes, in which the young artist presents a diploma standard short recital, is scheduled. The singer is Deborrah Millar. Also on the program is the female oratorio class which has attracted some of the city's best talent.

Things to look for as the festival's first week draws to an end are the speech honors performance Friday night at St. Matthias Hall, a great choral night Friday at St.John's Church and the Dance Honors Performance Sunday evening at McPherson Playhouse.

Big bands' Jane Froman dies, 72

COLUMBIA, Mo. (UPI) — Big band singer Jane Froman, whose life was portrayed on the movie screen by Susan Hayward in With a Song in My Heart, has died at her Missouri home. She was 72.

Her career spanned radio big-band performances in the 1930s to Broadway to the USO stages in Europe during the Second World War, winning the admiration of GIs and civilians.

Miss Froman's popularity began when she was placed under contract by Paul Whiteman in the '30s and sang on radio with the Lennie Hayton band, which included Benny Goodman and the Dorsey brothers.

She later played on Broadway in Artists and Models and the Ziegfeld Follies of 1933.

The soprano was seriously injured in an airplane crash in 1943 while en route to Europe with a USO troupe. A series of operations followed.

Miss Froman went overseas again in 1945 to entertain Allied forces. She was not fully recovered from her injuries, and performed with the aid of crutches and a wheelchair.

Her life story was filmed in 1952 by Warner Brothers, who cast Susan Hayward in the lead of the movie, With a Song in My Heart. Miss Froman's voice was dubbed in for the songs.

She was born Ellen Jane Froman in St. Louis Nov. 10, 1907, and attended the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. She was married to composer Don Ross, but they were divorced in 1948. She then married John Curtis Burn, a co-pilot of the plane that crashed in Europe. Both he and Miss Froman were injured in the accident.

Her funeral will be Friday at Calvary Episcopal Church in Columbia. Burial will be in Columbia Cemetery.

Marijuana confiscated

BELLE CHASSE, La. (UPI) — Colombian marijuana worth an estimated $13 million was confiscated from two tractor-trailers Sunday and two men were arrested on smuggling charges, authorities said.

Plaquemines Parish sheriff's deputies said they found 13 tons of marijuana in the back of the trucks, neatly concealed by huge crates of lettuce.

Declarer often cannot overcome a bad lie of the adverse cards and is forced to proceed in the hope that they will be divided favorably for him. But there are times when he can manipulate his resources so as to succeed despite an unlucky distribution of the missing cards, and these are the times when his mettle is fully tested.

Consider this deal where West leads a diamond, declarer winning East's king with the ace. South sees four potential losers — three clubs and a heart — and he therefore starts looking for ways to eliminate one of them.

One possibility, after drawing trumps, is to play a low heart from dummy toward his queen. If East has the king, South will make two heart tricks instead of one and thus make the contract.

Another possibility is to attack clubs by leading a low one towards dummy's jack. If the jack loses to East's king or ace, South will still have the Q-9 left and can later play a club from dummy toward them and perhaps score a club trick.

As the cards lie, these lines of play do not succeed and South would eventually go down one. However, after drawing trumps, declarer can assure the contract if he plays the hand correctly. He cashes the Q-9 of diamonds, discarding a heart from dummy, and then leads the ace and another heart.

These plays place South firmly in the driver's seat. The defender who wins the second heart lead with the king will have to yield a ruff and discard or else lead a club and thus establish a club trick for declarer that would otherwise be in doubt.

The suggested method of play totally eliminates the luck factor that appeared to exist when dummy first came down.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Friday, April 25, 1980
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You get "rare opportunity" to rectify recent mistakes, especially where an important relationship is concerned. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons figure prominently. Expand operations, open lines of communication.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are getting across point by giving of yourself. Be involved, express all the way, no pulling back or equivocating. Spotlight on children, love, change, speculation — and the number 4. Aquarius, Scorpio persons figure prominently.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Emphasis on writing, conversation, travel, relatives and communication. Your best and natural qualities surge to forefront. You get verification concerning property. You will be on a more secure base.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasis on ideas, trips, visits, special calls, mail and unique messages. Family member wants to "make peace." Be diplomatic, receptive. Recent contact brings reward. You receive gift which aids in making home a more pleasant place.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Hold off on direct debate, action. Play waiting game. Define terms, steer away from self-deception. Protect self in emotional clinches. Spotlight on agreements, contracts, ability to sense pulse of public. Pisces, Virgo natives play prominent roles.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You "bounce back" from adversity. This could be a power-play day. Be direct, accept challenge, responsibility, invest in your own ideas and talents. Judgment, intuition are on target. You win in big way. Cancer, Capricorn persons play significant roles.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Finish rather than begin — strike chord of universal appeal. Get look behind scenes, dig for information previously marked "confidential." Check Virgo message. What had been a source of fear, doubt will be erradicated.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Member of opposite sex aids in fulfilling hopes and wishes. Leo, Aquarius persons figure in "dramatic" scenario. One in authority makes financial decision in your favor. Adhere to original format. Your own style and principles represent most valuable assets.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Gather forces, define allies, evaluate influence. Be realistic concerning career potential, ambitions, goals, relations with one who can pull strings for you. Learn by teaching, utilize surprise element, know that unorthodox procedures could bring desired results.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Spotlight on special communications, education, pertinent reading material, chance to get rich through flexibility and display of versatility. Gemini, Sagittarius persons figure prominently. You succeed on "third try."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Money and love can mix — pursuit of "missing funds" could bring you closer to partner or mate. Revise, review, take a stand, refuse to sell yourself short. Another Aquarian is in picture. You gain access to privileged information. You are going to win!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Ask questions, obtain answers, stress long-range potential. Gemini, Virgo and another Pisces figure prominently. You get surprise — of pleasant variety. Member of opposite sex cares and proves it. Be aware of subtle legal nuances.

IF APRIL 25 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are discriminating, bright, introspective, sensitive, psychic and you have a tendency to brood when you lack perfection. Means your ideals are sky-high — you seldom are satisfied with substitutes or second best in any field. Pisces, Virgo persons play important roles in your life. June could be your most memorable month of 1980, a year in which you regain momentum, get second emotional wind, evaluate contacts, goals and a new-found independence. You gain, get on more solid emotional and financial ground. Individual you met last year "returns" and this could be "something big"!

Starting asparagus

Information on asparagus grown from seed has been sought by several readers. An article on obtaining asparagus plants in this way is published in this column each fall.

The seed is sown thinly in rows in spring and the seedlings encouraged to make strong growth during the following summer.

The next spring the plants are carefully lifted and replanted 15 cms. apart.

During the second year of growth all plants which produce flowers and berries are dug up and destroyed. These are female plants; they will never produce any edible shoots for cutting.

During the second year of growth the permanent bed is prepared. It can be square, oblong, or a single row along a fence, but it must be in full sun.

Illustrated articles appear each year on the making of an asparagus bed. The soil is prepared by adding compost or old manure, digging or tilling deeply.

Trenches are dug 30 cms. deep, the subsoil broken up and mixed with rough compost. Ten cms. of the mixed soil is then placed in the bottom of the trench.

By the third spring the seedlings should have roots comparable to the 2-year-old plants sold in garden outlets. If not they will need transplanting again at 30 cms spacing and be grown-on for another year.

At planting time the roots are spread out in the bottom of the trench 90 cms apart and covered with 10 cms. of the prepared soil mixture. As growth increases, the prepared soil is worked into the trench around the young plants until it reaches the level of the surrounding bed.

During the season the plants should make about 100 cms. of top growth, but any which produce flowers and berries must be removed and destroyed otherwise the bed will become a mass of useless seedlings.

The bed is mulched each fall with screened compost or old manure. This is done after the foliage has fallen and the bare canes cut down to soil level.

Over winter, kelp is collected from the beaches after gales, cut into 15 cms. lengths, and spread over the bed. Salt on the outside of the kelp is not harmful as asparagus is a salt-air plant.

When the old canes are cut down they are measured and the growth made that year is averaged. If it is 90 cms. cutting may be done for one week for each 30 cms. of growth, or for nearly three weeks.

As the bed becomes well established, cutting can be done for about six to eight weeks, but care must be taken to leave sufficient shoots to grow and manufacture food to build the roots for the next season's cutting.

Each spring the bed is dressed with a complete vegetable fertilizer (6-8-6 or 5-10-5) as soon as the cutting period ends.

Rivals battle for Zimbabwe

SALISBURY (AP) — More than 400 blacks have been arrested in shooting, grenade and beating attacks between rival political factions which killed at least four persons and injured hundreds of others in the week since Zimbabwe became independent, police reported today.

Former prime minister Abel Muzorewa and former guerrilla leader Joshua Nkomo blamed the attacks on supporters of Prime Minister Robert Mugabe. Mugabe, whose forces fought alongside those loyal to Nkomo during the seven-year guerrilla war against the white minority government, beat both men in the February elections following the January ceasefire.

A Mugabe spokesman dismissed the charges, saying members of all three rival political parties were responsible for violence throughout Zimbabwe, formerly the British colony of Rhodesia. The new state in southern Africa became independent last Friday.

Mugabe has warned that police will use the "sternest measures" to end the violence, the worst since interfactional fighting and clashes with police of the former white minority government in the early 1960s.

The ceasefire, elections and transition to independence were part of a British-sponsored peace treaty signed by the three men last December in London. The accord also led to dissolution of the interim settlement negotiated by former white leader Ian Smith, who was replaced by Muzorewa in the spring of 1979.

Meanwhile, The Chronicle, in an article published today, quoted Nkomo as saying all of his former guerrillas had returned to Zimbabwe to join an envisaged national army composed of former guerrilla forces and government troops.

About 3,000 of Nkomo's guerrillas remained in Zambia, their main base in the war, through the ceasefire and elections, while about 7,000 were inside the country at base camps monitored by Commonwealth troops.

Tito's critical condition eases

LJUBLJANA (Reuter) — Doctors treating President Tito said today the critical condition of the 87-year-old Yugoslav leader has "somewhat eased" but remains exceptionally grave.

A medical bulletin said the president's state of shock and coma are lightly less marked.

Today's report of an improvement, however slight, came as a major surprise since officials had predicted earlier this week that he would not be able to survive for long in his weakened state.

Liberia firing squad shot the acquitted

MONROVIA (AP) — Ignoring Western appeals for clemency, the army enlisted men who seized power in Liberia two weeks ago ordered the executions of 13 members of the deposed government although a court of officers sentenced seven of them to life imprisonment and acquitted two of them.

The president of the military court, Col. Frank Senkpenni, told reporters his tribunal was overruled by the 17-man People's Redemption Council headed by President Samuel Doe.

Doe, a 28-year-old master sergeant, led the April 12 military coup that overthrew President William Tolbert's government. Tolbert died in the coup. He is reported to have been slain by Doe.

The dead president's elder brother, Edward, chairman of the Senate, was among the 13 men executed Tuesday on a Monrovia beach while thousands cheered. He also was one of the four sentenced to death.

All 13 were accused of treason, "rampant corruption," abuse of public office and violation of human rights. But Senkpenni said only Tolbert, House Speaker Richard Henries, Chief Justice James Pierre and Reginald Townsend, chairman of Tolbert's True Whig party, were given death sentences.

He said seven others were acquitted on some of the charges and sentenced to life imprisonment, while two others were acquitted.

All were descendants of the freed U.S. slaves who founded Liberia in 1847, a minority that had ruled the country ever since.

A 14th defendant, former information minister Johnny McClain, also was acquitted and was not executed. McClain, who is assumed to be still in custody, was of tribal origin, like Doe and the other members of the Redemption Council.

The United States and other Western governments appealed to the new government not to kill any more former officials. The U.S. state department said it "deeply deplored" the executions, and UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim urged a halt to "summary executions without due process of law."

More than 80 former officials are awaiting trial by Senkpenni's military court. The tribunal resumed its hearings Wednesday with the interrogation of Tolbert's son-in-law, former defence minister Burleigh Holder.

Baby a vampire: mother

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — A baby girl whose mother thought the infant was a demon and a vampire was rescued unharmed after the mother held a steak knife to the child's chest for an hour Wednesday.

The incident began at about noon local time when police and a Social Services caseworker came to Catherine Freeman's back door with a court order to take custody of her six-week-old girl known as Princess Diane.

The court order said the 33-year-old Ms. Freeman was not mentally capable of caring for a child, said Sgt. E. E. Williamson.

Slamming the back door, Ms. Freeman rushed out the front door holding a steak knife to the baby's chest, said Odessa Long of the police department's youth division.

Standing in the hot sun, the woman cradled the baby in her left arm while holding the knife at the child's chest. She also held a Bible as she talked over a fence with police and caseworker Suzanne Jones.

Ms. Freeman demanded to talk to a man who frequently visits her, Earl Parker.

As Parker spoke with her, he suddenly grabbed her knife-wielding hand. "I made the decision to go for the knife," said Parker. "I didn't feel like she would kill the baby. Not at any time."

Three policemen then wrestled Ms. Freeman to the ground and handcuffed her while Ms. Long grabbed the baby.

CANTON, China (Reuter) — China has begun marketing a line of fragrant shoes claimed not only to prevent sweaty feet but also to help cure the disease of beriberi.

Today's Canton Daily said more than 40,000 pairs of the shoes have been exported so far this year.

A perfumed powder made from herbs is placed between the layers of the soles "which protects against insects and mold, and stops feet from sweating."

"If worn for long periods, they are also helpful in curing beriberi," the newspaper said.

Murderers brand their handiwork

SAN SALVADOR (Reuter) — Eighteen bodies, 10 of them branded with the letters EM, the dreaded sign of El Salvador's underground rightist death squad, were found Wednesday in the towns of Chalchuapa and Santa Ana, 80 kilometres east of here, police said.

All had bullet wounds in the head or neck.

A spokesman said 10 of the bodies with EM (Escuadron de la Muerte) scrawled across their chests were discovered in Chalchuapa. The other eight were found in Santa Ana.

El Salvador is troubled by leftist and rightist violence which many fear could lead to civil war.

Human rights officials here estimate that in the last six months alone about 2,300 people have been killed throughout the country in politically-motivated violence.

Police said that in Tecapan, about 130 kilometres west of here, a teacher was shot to death Wednesday by three masked men, and in San Salvador, the body of a woman whose relatives had earlier reported her kidnapped was found.

Councilman gunned down

GUATEMALA CITY (Reuter) — Police here say a member of Guatemala's Council of State was shot to death by gunmen.

Eduardo Ruiz, a farm representative on the Council of State which serves as an advisor to the President, was killed after gunmen forced him to get out of his car on the outskirts of Guatemala City.

Convention centre supporters answer back

By NORMAN GIDNEY

The backers of the waterfront convention centre on city council mounted a counter-attack Wednesday against the project's principal critic, Ald. Robin Blencoe.

Ald. Ron McKenzie and Mayor Bill Tindall let go with a one-two punch in a paper war of press releases, poking holes in Blencoe's arguments against the $8 million centre to be built at Wharf and Fort.

They released a barrage of statements totalling 38 pages, giving background information, copies of letters and one report on the site of the centre never before made public.

"I hope you will give me the time to give the true story behind the convention centre," McKenzie said at a news conference.

He said Blencoe and the press have muddied the waters at the 11th hour, while the public has had at least 14 months to raise objections to the location and the city's participation in the project.

The alderman has told the public there won't be anything for them in the new centre, McKenzie said.

"This statement is contrary to the truth in every respect," he added.

Meanwhile, after announcing a three-day public information exhibit next month at the McPherson Theatre to give the public a chance to examine the convention centre plans, Mayor Tindall delivered to aldermen a lengthy statement on the project.

Never mentioning Blencoe by name, it was an eight page point-by-point refutation of Blencoe's arguments against the site, the planning process and the proposed operating mechanism. Some paragraphs were word for word identical with McKenzie's statement.

To the alderman's suggestion that plans for the centre have been developed in secrecy, Mayor Tindall said:

"The record would appear to indicate that there has been far more public exposure of this particular development than probably in any comparable major project in this community."

He said plans for developing the site were announced as far back as late 1977, followed by a nationwide publicly advertised developer proposal competition. This was former recreation minister Sam Bawlf's plan for a major retail market on the waterfront.

This was dumped when no private developer's expressed an interest, but Tindall did not say that. In October, 1978, he said preliminary sketch proposals for a conference centre were presented to council, which unanimously endorsed the plan in principle.

The mayor also said that all the planning on the project was fully discussed with the Provincial Capital Commission, the government agency which is building the centre, at meetings attended by then mayor Mike Young and then alderman Bill Tindall.

"In fact, the revisions to minimize the commercial content and increase the public amenity content and reduce the scale of the total project were initiated within the commission by the civic representatives."

As to criticism of the site itself, the mayor said other locations have merit but "this is the only site which appears to require the kind of stimulative development represented by the conference centre, is readily available and has a price tag which minimizes the long-term drag on the public purse."

McKenzie said that "it is patently ridiculous for any member of city council or the media to say that opportunities have not existed for public input in this matter."

He said there is a 20-minute question period at each city council meeting when any citizen could ask questions about the convention centre, and they could also approach aldermen individually.

Ald. Blencoe replied with his own 1½-page statement this morning which suggested that the statements are "a carefully orchestrated plan to take attention away from the serious problems still facing the centre proposal."

He suggested that Tindall and McKenzie were dredging up past history, most of it irrelevant because of the changes in the centre project, to deflect public attention from the problems which remain.

"I do not want to do that. Victoria needs a conference centre and needs it as soon as possible. But the centre must be on the best possible site, must be well-planned, and must be developed in a way that will ensure its accountability to the public of Victoria."

HandyDART urged

Mayor Bill Tindall said Wednesday there is strong interest in B.C. in the proposed HandyDART custom transit system for the handicapped.

The Handy Dial-A-Ride-Transit will be available in the larger centres of the province depending on demand.

He said there has been a strong response to a questionnaire being circulated around B.C. by the Urban Transit Authority which seeks to assess what the demand will be.

Welfare rates increase 8.6%

By JAKE BANKY

Starting May 1, basic income assistance rates will rise an average of 8.6 per cent.

McCarthy said this figure exceeds the Vancouver Consumer Index increase of 7.6 per cent over the past 12 months.

And the minister promised her staff will be thoroughly examining the possibility of an annual cost-of-living adjustment to the GAIN allowance, so receipients can keep up with inflation.

Under the new rates, a single welfare recipient under the age of 31 will be eligible for a maximum support of $266 a month, compared to $240 under the old rates.

For a single parent with one child, the top limit will be $533, up from $490.

The rate change will cost the government $24 million in the current fiscal year.

Two other allowances will also be adjusted upwards May 1.

The comforts allowance — a payment for personal needs and sundries for those clients who reside in long-term care facilities, hospitals and adult residences — will increase to $50 a month from $40.

The extra allowance for blind recipients of GAIN handicapped benefits who use registered guide dogs will increase to $35 a month from $25.

Changes in Family Support Program subsidies were also announced.

The maximum subsidy payable by the ministry will be increased by eight per cent for each of the various day care programs.

In addition, two new categories of day care subsidies have been established to provide higher rates for children under the age of three.

Some of the ministry's family support services require an income test to determine the financial contribution from a family or individuals receiving the services.

The additional exemption for the disabled or for seniors over 65 in a family has been increased to $90 a month from $64.

CRD poised for Tillicum legal fight

By PAT DUFOUR

The battle between the Capital Regional District and Saanich over a proposed extension to the Tillicum shopping centre is coming to a head.

Regional board chairman Jim Campbell said today the CRD is poised to take legal action the minute Saanich approves removal of a restrictive covenant which would allow only 295,000 square feet of leasable space in the centre.

He said the district's solicitor would apply for an injunction to freeze the matter until the whole issue can be hammered out in court.

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier has called a special meeting for tonight to deal with the issue.

Couvelier Wednesday told the CRD board "to stick regionalism in its ear" and stormed out of the board meeting.

The outburst came during discussion of a bylaw to close a legal loophole and prevent Saanich from allowing the extension.

The extension would increase the size from 295,000 square feet to 495,000 square feet and add an Eaton's store.

The bylaw was given three readings and referred to the technical planning and regional planning committees.

Couvelier blew up when Campbell ruled him out of order as the mayor tried to interrupt Mika, who was arguing that the expansion proposal had been sprung on council without warning.

"That's absolutely not true," Couvelier snapped.

Replied Mika: "I don't know about other members of council but it was sprung without warning on me."

Mika said litigation might have been the best way to settle the matter but Couvelier voted against this course.

"It's a bit late for him now," Mika said, adding, "the chickens are coming home to roost."

Couvelier said earlier he was against the extension because of an agreement made between Saanich and the CRD.

Under that agreement, Saanich placed a restrictive covenant on the Tillicum site which prevented Cal Investments from developing more than 295,000 square feet of leasable space.

Last week, however, Saanich council decided the covenant should be lifted to allow Eaton's into the complex.

Layoffs at GM hit 90,300

DETROIT (Reuter) — General Motors Corp. today announced it would cut production at five U.S. plants next week, temporarily idling 12,750 workers.

That will bring the total of indefinite layoffs of GM workers to 90,300 in the U.S.

GM said the cutbacks, needed to balance inventories in a sluggish auto market, will affect production of trucks, chassis and full- and mid-size cars.

GM previously announced cutbacks at three other plants beginning next week, placing 8,300 workers on indefinite layoff.

The five domestic automakers said Wednesday car sales in the April 11-20 period declined 32.2 per cent on a daily sales basis to 147,371 units from 244,379 last year.

The industry's daily selling rate of 18,421 for the period was only slightly higher than the 18,336 recorded in the period in 1975.

Cuban wave reaches U.S.

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — The stream of Cuban refugees was developing into a flood today, with 200 more arriving here at daylight and at least another 1,000 reported on their way in a flotilla of hundreds of boats.

The refugees are crossing the Straits of Florida in boats piloted by Cuban exiles and others willing to defy U.S. state department orders.

Boat captains arriving today said they passed hundreds of boats crossing the 145 kilometres between Cuba and the tip of the Florida Keys.

"There's got to be 500 or 600 boats out there. There're lots of little ones," said Tony Ravello, captain of the Surgidero.

"There are still continuous launchings. We know that there are at least 300 en route to Cuba. It's going to get a lot busier," said Key West Coast Guard Cmdr. Samuel Dennis.

Granma, the Cuban Communist party newspaper, said 444 "anti-social elements" left the port of Mariel on Wednesday, and that 94 boats from the U.S. were in Mariel at the end of the day, waiting to load.

The U.S. Coast Guard was warning boatlift operators they face arrest and heavy fines for bringing illegal aliens into the U.S.

The state department in Washington also warned that boat owners are subject to prosecution. The Immigration and Naturalization Service said it will "act to stop boat owners from bringing Cubans and other aliens" into the country.

However, local U.S. Immigration and coast guard officials weren't showing any inclination to stop the boats.

"My boss told me, don't you dare arrest anybody," one unidentified immigration officer was quoted by The Miami News.

Vessels were putting to sea from Key West Marina every five minutes Wednesday as bidding for charter boats reached as high as $10,000. About 495 refugees docked here Wednesday aboard six boats. A boat also slipped into harbor at Miami with 65 refugees aboard.

The refugees were taken by bus from Key West to a community centre in Miami's Little Havana district, where they were processed by immigration agents and greeted by a crowd of exiles, hoping to find relatives.

The boatlift began last weekend with Cuba's consent after the Cuban government suspended refugee flights to Costa Rica.

The state department has warned the boatlift was undermining international efforts to evacuate the thousands of Cubans who sought refuge at the Peruvian Embassy in Havana.

Fearing many boats will run into difficulties during the 12-hour trip, the coast guard had two 12-metre patrol boats, two 28-metre cutters and one 64-metre cutter on standby.

Dockmaster Dean Patterson said: " We've already had two or three that came back. Small boats just aren't made for that kind of endurance."

No puffing plan up in smoke

By NORMAN GIDNEY

An imaginative experiment to make an entire provincial government office building a no smoking zone is collapsing because hard core smokers are refusing to abide by the voluntary guidelines.

The Richard Blanshard building — headquarters of the B.C. health ministry at Blanshard and Pandora — adopted a no smoking policy last year restricting puffers to the coffee rooms and lounges on each floor and one-third of the 1,000 seat cafeteria.

A voluntary agreement was worked out between then health minister Bob McClelland — himself a three pack a day man until he quit in 1977 — and John Fryer, general secretary of the B.C. Government Employees Union.

A six-month trial of the ban started July 1, 1979.

The experiment appears to be a failure, according to what senior civil servants of the health ministry and other sources tell the Times.

Health Minister Rafe Mair is being asked to negotiate a mandatory ban on cigarettes with the BCGEU.

The policy worked for a while, as the ministry juggled desks and accommodated some heavy smokers by allowing them to take their work to one of the smoking areas.

But it began to break down because a small group of smokers refused to go along. Peer group pressure and moral suasion turned out to be ineffectual weapons against the clouds of blue smoke.

"The voluntary program is in very shaky condition," said Jack Bainbridge, assistant deputy minister of health in charge of support services.

Bank rate dips again

OTTAWA (CP) — The Bank of Canada rate fell to 15.67 per cent, down from 15.96 per cent last week, the central bank announced today.

The drop for the second week in a row in the trend-setting rate will likely be followed shortly by a reduction in loan rates by banks and other lenders.

Beer up 20 cents, gas boosted too

The price of beer has been increased in B.C. by 20 cents a dozen, effective immediately, the liquor distribution branch announced Wednesday.

And Greater Victoria gas prices have gone up by about .4 cents a litre or two cents a gallon as a result of changes in the federal sales tax.

A liquor branch spokesman said beer prices were supposed to rise May 7, but the branch implemented the increases sooner because of new federal taxes. It will apply to new stock as it reaches the shelves.

Plants have feelings too, Grade 6 experiment finds

By PAUL MINVIELLE

Shannon Roach has never read The Secret Life of Plants but her recent science fair project has turned her into a believer in plant consciousness.

The 12-year-old Grade 6 student has just finished an experiment with two African violet plants that she feels proves that plants respond to TLC — tender loving care.

Talking nicely to plants to encourage them isn't new but Shannon decided to see what difference there would be between a plant that was sweet-talked and another that was bad-mouthed.

The two plants were watered and fed equally.

Shannon spoke sweetly to Plant 1, telling it how beautiful it was and occasionally playing music on the stereo for it.

But she snarled at Plant 2, telling it what rotten vegetation it was and that it looked like a wicked weed.

Plant 2 was scraggly, its four blossoms wilted.

"It looked like it was dying," Shannon said.

So does Shannon have plans to become a mad scientist?

"I want to be a florist or a flower arranger like my aunt."

But those flowers better do what they're told or they're in big trouble.

TORONTO (CP) — Prices were lower in active trading on the Canadian bond market Wednesday.

Prices opened half of a point higher on news that Chase Manhattan Bank in the United States lowered its prime lending rate to 19 from 19½ per cent, but slipped later to close one-quarter of a point lower.

The short end of the market was off 15 cents. Mid-, long-term, provincial and corporate issues dropped one-quarter of a point.

New York

The stock market headed higher today, resuming its rally of earlier in the week.

Four of the 15 most active NYSE issues were utilities. Texas Utilities rose ⅜ to $19¼, Florida Power and Light ⅛ to $27⅛, Central and South West ¼ to $14¼, and Pacific Gas and Electric ⅝ to $23⅝.

Ten blocks of 100,000 shares or more of utility issues crossed the ticker tape in the first two hours, handled by such leading block-trading firms as Merrill Lynch, First Boston, Morgan Stanley and Salomon Brothers.

Analysts said one or more large investing institutions evidently optedto build up holdings of utilities in view of the recent decline ofinterest rates.

The utility group, which is sensitive to changing trends in rates because of its high yields, has been one of the strongest sectors of the market in recent weeks as rates have fallen from their peaks.

Among the gambling stocks, Caesars World rose 1⅝ to $15 and Bally Manufacturing climbed 2½ to $24¾. The issues were recommended by a investment adviser.

London

The Financial Times index was down 1.2 to 434.0.

Canadian stocks were lower.
